C+VG'S ARCADE CHAMPIONSHIP CHALLENGE

A brand new arcade machine could be yours!

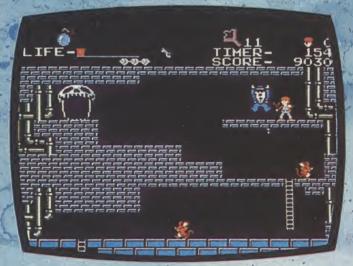

The C+VG Arcade Action Special, free with Computer + Video Games, July 1987. EDITOR: Clare Edgeley TYPESETTING AND DESIGN: Graphic Impressions

Goonies from Nintendo, based on the film of the same name, is a cute little game of levels and ladders. It's a treasure hunt which takes you deep into the bowels of Goonie land before you can find the cache of gold and jewels.

submission before they get a chance to do the same to you.

jumping shoes and ear muffs are a few of the objects worth picking up. I can guess what jumping shoes will do for you, but ear muffs?

Being a levels and ladders game means that there are countless nasties patrolling the levels and lots of walls blocking your path

Many of the nasties are mice and you should kick these to reveal hidden bombs. The bombs can be used to demolish walls, behind which are hidden objects. These help your score and your progress in the game.

Keys must also be collected. These open doors allowing you to travel further underground. Your friends must be set free from their prisons and diamonds collected to keep up your strength.

Too much contact with mice will kill you, so make sure you kick them into

The Goonies relies heavily on timing and is an appealing and colourful game. Very pleasant to play.

Avenger is Capcom's, latest and it's a martial arts simulation of sorts. The two heroes are characters called Ryu and Ko. If you're in two player mode, both characters fight simultaneously.

On with the story. News filters through to our heroes that their home town has been over run by the villainous Geshita who's taken many villagers hostage.

Ryo and Ko steam in to run the baddies out, of town and restore "peace and honour". So says the official brochure.

The scenes are colourful and though the thoves are simple, Geshita's henchmen don't he sitate to attack. You'll have your hands full juggling the punch and kick buttons to knock them out.

Af you combine both punch and kick buttons you can perform the roundhouse kick which takes most baddies unawares.

Fireballs are just some of the hazards you'll have to cope with — best to dodge these weapons can be found behind closed doors.

Look for the doors, kick them down and on with the battle.

Occasionally the baddies manage to grab hold of you, however, it's possible to break their grip by juggling the joysticks. With luck you should come away unscathed.

There's lots of action and some pretty graphics. It looks as if Capcom has come up with another goodie!

There have been two major coin-op shows in the last two months. In May's C + VG we brought you news of games which were shown for the first time in Japan. This month we are going to look at the offerings at the recent New Orleans show.

Road Blasters in Atari's latest coup and by all accounts it should be a winner. Not only was it designed in conjunction with Matchbox Toys — creators of all those fantastic mini cars and lorries, but it also incorporates a high score competition which can win you a Road Blasters t-shirt.

Road Blasters is a fast paced driving shoot 'em up, with the fire buttons set into the steering wheel. There's an accelerator to control the speed of your rally car and the whole game is built into a new style futuristic cabinet.

The game is a rally in which you have to drive through different countries, passing checkpoints and rally points. Each new area brings a new scenario and renewed attacks by enemy vehicles whose one aim is to stop you making it to the next rally checkpoints. Atari describe the game as futuristic warfare.

You'll have to run the gauntlet of heavily armoured Command Cars, evasive and unpredictable Rat Jeeps and super fast Stingers.

Other hazards include mines embedded in the road, gun turrets which shoot at your car as you zoom past and bombs thrown by the enemy.

There are ways to defend yourself. By docking with a special weapons pack, dropped by a friendly support jet, you can arm your car with such annihilating firepower as a Cruise missile, a Nitro Injector, a U.Z. Cannon or an Electro Shield. The last will stop most enemy bullets.

Fuel can be picked up en route by running over red and green pods and each time you pass a checkpoint your fuel tanks are automatically refilled.

To win a Road Blasters t-shirt you must complete wave 50 after which you'll be given a personalized secret code. This must be sent off to Atari for vertification and they will send you a t-shirt. More details when the game reaches the UK.

Cycle Shooting and N.Y. Captor are two of a new range of shooting games from Taito. They are two-piece target shooting games with the guns are fixed to the outside of the cabinet.

Mutant cycle gangs terrorize deserted cities in Cycle Shooting. You job is a clean up operation, which takes you into ghost towns, through empty highways and out into the desert.

Shooting straight is the only way to stay alive, and dodging the enemy fire helps too! Knowing what lies ahead helps and if you can chase a trio of manic mohawks into the desert and onto a log bridge you can blow them all up by shooting at the dynamite which is sweating gently under the bridge.

Some gang leaders have to be shot a number of times before they die, so watch out for the beserker who races around terrorising everybody with his rocket launcher and machine gun. A particularly nasty character.

And then there's the armour clad young lady who wields a shield to deflect your bullets. A spot of careful shooting will rip away her armour piece by piece until you can get in a killing shot.

The skies aren't safe either. Flying nasties zoom down and must be hit before touching the ground. It sounds pretty hectic and fast paced and should be in the arcades shortly.

Your reflexes must be very fast — shoot a hostage and you'll earn penalties. The hostages look pathetically innocent and it's not hard to tell them apart from the baddies, however, in the heat of the moment you'll find you'self squeezing that trigger without meaning to!

Trick shots are hidden on each screen and these are a great bonus, however, don't count on picking them up. Instead, conserve your shots. Try to use just a single shot on each baddie.

Nintendo is putting Gradlus onto its new Play Choice-10 system, so that you have a choice of playing this or one of the nine other games available.

Another new game to be added to Nintendo's Play Choice 10 is Volley Ball.

The game is viewed as from a balcony and the screen scrolls from left to right to cover the court. Various Volley Ball moves are included and the idea is to slam, block and spike your way through a series of games to, win for your team the championship title.

championship title

Following hot on the heels of the news that Bally Sente is to use Commodore's Amiga technology in future games comes the first release in the new range.

Moonquake is a space scenario with some fantastic graphics and sound effects. This looks to be a game of skill and for once it's a space them without the almost mandatory space craft.

The idea is to travel along an interplanetary belt collecting payloads of minerals to send back to your planet. Your score is based on the amount of minerals you manage to collect.

Moonquakes and deadly meteor showers are just some of the hazards you'll come across — the quakes cause great cracks and chasms to appear on the surface of the belt and the meteors cause as much havoc by breaking through this strange highway.

Watch your step — you don't want to fall into the abyss below! On the other hand the meteors can build up on the surface, allowing you to collect them and send them back as a payload.

Your space suit is equipped with rockets which fire in four directions — each rocket is contolled by one of four fire buttons. And, apparently, the voice over instructions are of human quality — generated by the Amiga sound chip.

Bally/Sente and mastertronic's new Arcadia coin-op system — news on this elsewhere — both use an Amiga board in their machines.

N.Y. Captor will take you back a few months to the days when Hogan's Alley and Bank Panic were in their heyday. N.Y. Captor is played on much the same lines and is based on your skills as a sharp shooter.

With a fake 45 automatic grasped in your sticky hands, you've got to knock out all the hit men on each screen. They pop up into windows, from behind walls and doorways, in fact, from behind any object that offers them sufficient cover. To finish each round you've got to kill The Boss, and needless to say he's the trickiest to hit.

The shoot out takes you through a number of scenes which include a luxury mansion, city alleys and a skyscraper. Once you've taken out the gang you're awarded a bonus round at the local target range — just to give you some practice for the next screen.

game if you have the ammo.

The enemy gang don't hang around—their sharp shooting can be uncomfortably accurate and you'll have to be quick on your toes to dodge their bullets.

Nintendo's new game Gradius has been licensed from Konami and is simply Nemesis revisited.

Although the storyline has been changed the graphics have not, and there's no doubt that this' is, in fact, a replica of Konami's best seller.

The action is super fast, the graphics

Mastertronic is a familiar name to gamesters everywhere. But now the budget masters have gone into arcades in big way. The Amiga B52 board is the brain inside the new Mastertronic machines which you'll find in the arcades with a big Arcadia logo. The first couple of games are the home grown Road Wars plus a new improved version of that classic game Boulderdash called Rockford.

Road Wars, pictured below, features two gaint armoured balls rolling along a deadly highway packed with mobile and static hazards. It's an addictive shoot'em up with a driving soundtrack, different looking graphics and exciting gameplay. What can you say about Boulderdash? that hasn't been said before? It features Rockford — but this new version has earth-like globes instead of boulder to collect plus even more firesome hazards like the homing sparks and more familiar butterflies.

The game also features a neat "death" squences which show you just why your Rockford has departed this world.

You'll be seeing the games in your local arcades very soon. But if you're an Amiga programmer interested in arcade games then Mastertronic would be very interested in hearing from you. You can contact them at 10 Paul Street, London EC2A 4JH.

Whenever you see a huge stylised sit-in cabinet equipped with stereo sound, hydraulics, the lot, you know that the cabinet has been designed for just one game. Take Space Harrier or Out Run for example.

However, a fantastic universal simulator is under production which is designed to take any video game. The far-sighted companies to produce this new cabinet are Deith Leisure, distributors of video games and Edward Brooks Kiddie Rides, the first manufacturer to make a video game kiddie ride.

The first version of the simulator is called Air Attack and will be sold with Tatsumi's Lock-On as the video game for around the £6,000 mark.

Lock-On has you in control of a fighter plane, being bombarded by the enemy and is a fantastic shoot 'em up. Once it's been fitted into this futuristic hydraulics operated simulator it should offer you the ride of a lifetime.

SOLOMON'S KEY

Here's a tasty little number! Solomon's Key, an arcade strategy game with enough addictive qualities to turn even the toughest coin-op critic into a arcade junky. The idea is pretty simple. You control an explorer looking for King Solomon's treasure among a network of mysterious rooms.

He leaps around on stone blocks which he can create and break at will. He collects treasures and ultimately, to finally move on to the next screen, has to reach the key to a door which provides his escape route.

The game has to be tackled screen by screen — with more complex and dangerous hazards appearing as you move further into the game. It's a totally addictive mixture of Bombjack and that old C+VG favourite Pengo. If you see it — play it! Now for some brief hints.

- Generally the game is pure strategy. Finding the most efficient route to the key AND the door within the given time limit. Didn't we say before? There's a time limit on each screen. Sneaky!
- There are certain objects to collect that are useful. Like the fireballs in screen three which add to your defensive capabilities.
- Watch for the messages which appear in screens. These give access to the "hidden" screens. Some are riddles. Like the message which reads "Cast a Spell on the key at III III". What this means is you have to wave the wand at the key in level III III to gain access to a bonus level.
- The blocks sometimes reveal useful objects when smashed. Sometimes you can exchange objects if you replace and smash the blocks.
- Collecting fairies gives you extra lives yes, really but you need to find 10 fairies per life.

Now, check out our screen by screen look at the game that's going to have you glued to it's joystick throughout the summer!

RYGAR

Tom Hargreaves from London is quite simply, a Rygar fanatic and we've persuaded him to tell you how to gain a high score. Tom's highest is 1,771,070. Pretty tough, although it's not quite high enough to get into our UK Hall of Fame! Maybe Tom's tips will help you get into the picture?

To get anywhere in Rygar you're going to have to pick up weapons. These last until you are killed.

- The Star gives you a greater firing range and you'll be able to hit any monster on the screen.
- The Crown gives extra power to each shot you fire and you can kill more than one monster with a single bullet.
- The Tiger Head allows you to kill monsters by jumping on their heads.
- •The Shield makes you invulnerable for a short period anything from 15 to 40 seconds.
- The Sun gives your shots the power to go higher and you should be able to kill most flying monsters.
- When you have collected all five weapons, you'll be awarded a bonus of 160,000 points. You will only get this once on each life.
- Collect the yellow stars and when you have eight you'll get a 70,000 bonus.
- •If you get into a tight spot you can always jump onto a monster's head and paralyse it for a short time. You'll only kill it if you have the Tiger Head.
- When your time runs out, a floating red head comes after you. If you wait until it floats to its lowest point on the screen, you can jump over it and earn yourself some extra time. Do not touch the head it often kills you.
- If you find a red stone bearing a question mark, do NOT pick it up. Shoot at it until it turns into the Shield.
- At the end of each round you must enter a hut where you are given some idea of what lies ahead.
- A man holding the symbol 'E' means that there is an extra man somewhere on the next stage. As soon as you find it, it will float upwards — grab it before it goes out of reach.
- A scroll bearing a cross surrounded by stars means that a Shield lies somewhere in the next stage.
- On level two, if you shoot the stack of lions before they hit the ground, you'll get a bonus of 10,000.
- On level four, an extra life is to be gained.
- Level seven is a Shield level:
- Levels 12 and 17 give you the chance to go for another life.
- Level 18 is another Shield level.

GAUNTLET

Swords and sorcery rule ok? Gauntlet was the first and is still the best multi-player game in the arcades. It stunned arcade aces when it first appeared — and it is still coining it in video-palaces all over the country. Gauntlet II tried to repeat the success of the original — but here at C+VG we reckon the original. UK Hall of Fame star Gary Spencer brings you these hints.

You start Gauntlet with 800 life points, which decrease rapidly as you play. You can loose anything from two to 30 points if you hit something — or something hits you increase your health points by eating the food you find dotted about. Obvious really!

You can choose the play the Wizard, Elf, Valkyrie or Warrior. Start off as the Wizard — but if and when you manage to reach level 50 become the Elf and collect all the magic potions

The first seven screens are ALWAYS the same when you start a new game But after screen eight onwards you could see one of the 40 remaining screens at random

To be a successful Gaunt leteer learn the screen layouts, where the food and potions are and the quickest route to the exit. You can decide to wait around on any screen — you'll lose 180 health points but all the walls will turn into exits. This is very handy on harder levels — but while you're waiting don't move or shoot anything as it will take longer for the exits to appear if you do.

After level seven magic potions, which give you extra magic power, appear on every third screen. Collect these until you have six — you'll be almost invincible.

After level 50 a thief appears — If he touches you you'll lose one potion If you shoot him he'll give you back a normal potion—so always shoot him before he gets near you

SUPER SPRINT

Improve your Super Sprint technique using Gary Sheinwald's trackside drivers guide. Grab your crash hat and prepare to burn rubber!

Super Sprint is the best multi player arcade game ever.

Super Sprint is a two dimensional top-view multi player car racing arcade game, where up to three players can race against each other and against the computer. The computer controls at least one car, and all cars not being played by humans.

These are eight tracks to compete on, and each race lasts four laps. It you crash into one of concrete walls, your car explodes, and then you have to wait a few seconds while a helicopter flies across the screen to deliver a new car.

The game will present obstacles on the track, such as water patches — these slow the car down — oil slicks — which make the car spin full circle — mud slicks (which do both), and small round bollards which move in and out of the track in groups of three making life very difficult at times

A nasty element is a tornado which roams around the track creating havoc — your car will go into an uncontrollable spin if you drive into of these, and you won't get proper control again until you are out of harm's way!

As well as this, some of the tracks have gates which open and close, providing short cuts for those drivers with fast enough reactions — the drones are very good at making use of these, so you should be equally adept.

What sets Super Sprint apart from any other car racing game is the way in which players can built up the specification of their car as the races progress. Anyway, on to the interesting stuff...

First off is selecting the starting track. Your best bet is to start on the easy track (centre top of the screen), unless two people you don't want to play against have walked up to the machine, in which case you should select the most difficult track to get rid of them.

A point worth noting is the way in which the steering wheel operates. Unlike a real steering wheel, you don't need to spin the wheel back the other way after exiting a corner as the machine readjusts automatically. Many a time I've watched a novice player exit a corner and thud straight into a wall because they've been spinning the wheel back.

As any Super Sprint player will know — the second, and most interesting aspect of the game is that you can run over the golden spanners that materialise on the track, and if you collect three, you will be able to customize your car. Each option can be built up as far as 5 levels. The different customization options are as follows:

Super Traction: This option makes you car "stick" to the track more effectively when negotiating corners. It is rather like increasing the angle of tilt on the wings of a normal racing car, creating more downforce. This option is great for novice players who keep crashing at every other corner. However, if you are to become an advanced Super Sprinter, using the ability to slide the car round the corners is going to be your most important asset. Sliding the car is an art; a combination of putting the power on during the approach to the corner, then taking your foot off the accelerator during the corner and powering out of it while spinning the wheel vigourously if necessary. This will keep your speed high, and give you a great advantage over the drones, if not all the other players.

 Higher Top Speed: This option is very straightforward, and simply increases the maximum possible speed attainable by your car.

Turbo Acceleration: This option is the first one that should be built upon when three spanners have been collected. It will enable you to escape from the drones at the start of the race, and avoid any start-line collisions.

 Increase Score: Unless you're going for a top score, this option is a complete waste of time. Take this option when you've managed to get everything else.

So, the best method is build up acceleration and top speed alternately up to number 5, then go for the higher score. You may need one or two Super Tractions when you've built up the rest to level 5, if you can't handle the car with all that power under the foot!

A quick word about "Championship Sprint". This is a two player version of Super Sprint, with a couple of differences. Firstly, there are a new set of tracks provided, which set a fair challenge to seasoned Super Sprinters. Secondly, the increase score option has been removed, and a faster helicopter option added. A good feature for accident-prone players!

For those of you who can't even get round the track in a sensible fashion, here are some drawings of a couple of them, with annotations to help you, and for those of you think it is a sin to insert their hard-earned dough into a coin slot, the news that Activision are hastily converting the game to most popular micros — may be of some consolation.

Anyway, the illustrated tracks have an optimum route marked—try and follow this is you can. Circles mean that you should take your foot off the accelerator, and squares mean that you should put the power on again.

Some of the tracks have a "figure-of-eight" area, where the paths of cars travelling in opposite directions may cross. You should not try to avoid hitting cars travelling the other way, as you'll waste more time and be more likely to crash than if you simply ignored their presence.

A couple of the tracks have tight curves where purple lines cross the track indicating that there are "steps" (i.e. the track is going downwards). Don't bother slowing down for this — in fact, put your foot to the floor and slide the car round in a wide arc.

When you're on bridges, keep away from the edge of the track, as you can easily go too far and suddenly find yourself in an exploded state on the track below!

Next we come to drones. The drones are the cars that are controlled by the computer. The green car is always a drone, and if any of the other cars are not being controlled by other players, they will be raced as drones as well.

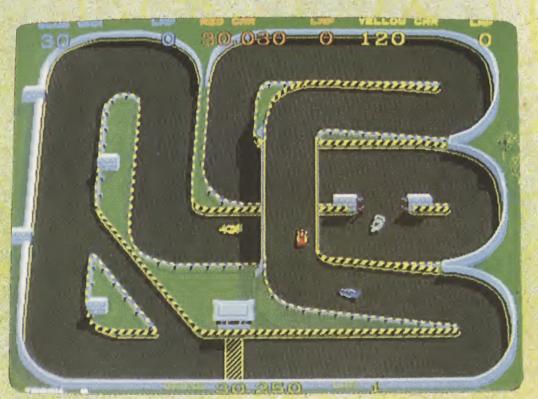

There is a sort of a way around this, however. If one player is beaten and leaves the machine, when a new player starts from scratch, the drones in the next race will always drive fairly slowly, to give the new player a bit of a chance. Advanced players can use this to their advantage, or even pre-empt it for the sake of a lost 20p on a friend's behalf.

Compassionate players who are a couple of laps ahead of the drone might think about waiting for other players to overtake the drone, before they dart across the finish line. Visitors to arcades may well have noticed frantic players screaming "Are you past the drone?!" at each other. This is the reason why.

The drones can be a real pain at times. They will do their best to knock you off the road whenever possible, and especially if you keep beating them. If a drone keeps crashing into you, the best manoeuvre is to hang behind him, and wait until you're in a position to easily go wide and overtake him — a good level of turbo acceleration is important here. Drones will even go for you if you're way ahead and coming round to lap them.

There are two new football games around and they couldn't be more different. Kick and Run from Taito is a complex five a-side game with a choice of multiple moves for the players.

Universal's American Soccer is a three-a-side American style soccer game.

To kick off let's look at Kick and Run — by far the more sophisticated of the two. The game scrolls up and down, left and right across the pitch while you juggle your players and the ball.

The pace is fast and it's very difficult for a first timer to get the hang of control which is by joystick, fire button and foot pedal.

The joystick obviously controls direction and is used with fire button to give flying kicks, headers and throw-ins.

A combination of the button and foot pedal lets your players perform real acrobatics — a banana shot, overhead kick, diving header, lobbing and feinting. These are just some of the moves, the longer the button or foot pedal is pressed the further the ball will travel.

There's a choice of eight teams — Brazil, England, W. Germany, Italy and so on, each with its team colours

The players have a clear cartoon quality to their moves, especially when a goal is scored. Then they act like young gazelles bouncing and hopping round the pitch while the goal keeper is left to thump the ground in frustration!

Kick and Run is very realistic, especially when two players are at the controls. Then the competition between teams is fierce.

American Soccer is much simpler with only two players and a goal keeper to each team. The screen scrolls left and right and there is a joystick for direction and two control buttons — one to kick, the other to switch between players.

When one player has the ball, dribbling, feinting and kicking it to one end of the pitch, his team mate stands like a blockhead in the middle of the field until you switch players to bring him into control of the ball.

For all its simplicity the game can be very fast and vicious, especially when there are two of you playing.

Goals are easy to score, just get within sight of the net, press the kick button and in it goes.

Players show lots of unsportsmanlike behavious and are constantly knocking each other over — fouls are never called.

It's much easier to keep up the with game in American Soccer. You could hardly get left behind — the pitch is very small and there is only one player to contend with at a time.

I prefer Kick and Run, which offers much more scope for budding football fans.

BIONIC COMMANDOS

Capcom's latest release, Bionic Commandos, is a simple but, thoroughly enjoyable shoot em up with one innovative feature — a bionic arm which plays a major role in the game.

You've heard the story line before — one man against a particularly nasty army of invaders. Your mission is to infiltrate enemy lines, destroy their super missiles which threaten your country and discover the secret plans which detail where and how their next attack will be made. Simple!

Armed with absolutely no useful knowledge about the habits of the enemy you swing into action. Swing is the operative word as your bionic arm shoots out to grab onto a tree branch high above your head. A tap of the fire button and it starts to reel in dragging you up with it. Quick as a flash, hop onto the branch machine gun at the ready to knock out any attackers.

Some of the enemy are content to fire at you from a safe distance, others charge on sight and you'd better have that arm ready if you're to escape being flattened, and finally others give chase in a desperate attempt to stop you getting near their base.

Bionic Commandos is a levels game with the enemy base high out of sight. You'll have to swing from branch to branch using your arm to get you over impassable gaps and to escape the enemy.

Apart from being able to hoist you up, your arm, if attached at an angle to a ledge on your left and right, acts like a rope.

You can swing on it Tarzan style and even use it to knock out the enemy. Unfortunately, a blow from the arm only stuns them momentarily, but it gives you time to get your machine gun ready to shoot them.

The action is fast and highly entertaining. Weapons can be collected en route, that is, if you can grab them as they float past on parachutes. Again use your bionic arm.

Hazards include beds of monster thorns, growing like strange orchids on the tree branches and hornets' nests. Both are deadly.

Avoid the thoms at all costs, and shoot the nests and the resulting swarms of irate hornets as you come across them.

At least if the nests are empty you won't have to worry about being stung to death in the middle of a battle!

Another tip for the flat footed. Not all the branches are safe, and more often than not you'll be standing on the wrong end of one when it snaps off from the tree.

A plunge to the death is the result. The answer is not to stay for too long in any one place and have your arm at the ready to catch onto a branch or ledge above you.

Flying mutants are a further hazard, either knock them out in mid-flight or shoot them.

After the first level, the scenery changes, the going gets tougher and the hazards more numerous. But that's only to be expected and adds to the enjoyment of this highly addictive game. Once again, Capcom has come up with the goods.

SUPER QIX

Cast your mind back to 1983 when coin ops were just beginning to make their mark on the software industry. Remember Qix from Taito? A brilliantly simple idea. All you had to do was to draw lines round the screen, blocking off areas, while trying not to collide with the deadly sparks and other sundry nasties.

Well, Taito has decided to release Super Qix — a more sophisticated version of the original. Believe me, the theme retains all of its old addiction!

No wonder software houses copied it to death four years ago, I wouldn't be at all surprised to see some new releases based on Super Oix.

You start off with an empty screen, the borders of which are patrolled by skulls, fatal to touch. Press the move button, push your joystick in the direction you want to draw a line and you're off

Danger is all around, namely in the shape of a single string of mutant green meanies which swell and grow, extending their line in first one direction, then another.

Should they manage to touch any part of your line before you reach the safety of the edge of the screen, you lose a life and the line you were drawing disappears.

The idea is to fill or paint 75 per cent of the screen trapping the mutants in the remaining 25 per cent. No easy task.

Skulls chase you round the screen, following your lines to catch up with you. Drawing loops in your line often confuses them and they may end up running round in circles, allowing you to get away.

Hearts with symbols at their centres also give chase, giving bonus features if you can run into them.

An 'H' gives your brush point extra speed allowing you much more manoeuvrability, Others make your line indestructible.

I wasn't able to test out all the hearts but several times I collided with an object only to be killed instantly.

It seems that not all features are bonuses you want to keep!
One of these is a ball of fire which burns your brush point to a frazzle when it catches up with you. To be avoided at all costs.

Letters also trundle round the screen, and spelling C.A.S.T.L.E. Pick up these for extra points.

Unlike the other features, they do not keep to the lines you've drawn and tend to wander all over the screen — consequently, it's much harder to catch up with them.

When you've finally managed to fill the required 75 per cent the lines disappear and left behind is a picture of fairy tale castle. Each screen reveals a different picture, and the letters you have to collect spell it out.

Super Qix might be an ancient idea but it's really good fun and requires some skill to complete each screen. My one gripe is the slow movement of the paintbrush — it's horribly nerve racking waiting to see if you can complete a line before the meanies get you.

It's great, to see a golden oldie reappearing in the arcades, and though not original, I'll be surprised if it's not a success.

TRICKY DOC

Tricky Doc is a new arrival in the arcades and comes from the Spanish company, Tecfri. Spot on timing and the ability to jump and dodge masses of little monsters is the basis of this very cute game.

You play the part of a mad Doc with a load of escaped monsters on his hands. The idea is to squirt them with a magic aerosol to make them disappear. Only trouble is, they're more likely to stampede you!

Tricky Doc is a levels and platforms game, full of lifts and moving platforms to carry you to new areas of the screen. Some areas need quite a bit of practise to negotiate safely — reminds me of Jet Set Willy!

The monsters are terrific. Great green slithery things, frogs, bats, flying gremlins and aliens from outer space make up just a few hazards you'll come across.

Coupled with these are inanimate objects like a toy train set which runs you over and you'll realise that staying alive is pretty tricky.

The action is fast and ultra-smooth, and the game is very amusing. If you haven't picked up one of the many aerosol sprays, you can defend yourself by punching the monsters on the snoot.

However, if you mistime your punch, the monster will grab you first and put you to sleep.

The danger of the aerosol lies in the fact that you have to be almost on top of the monster before the spray takes effect. That leaves a lot of room for mistakes, believe me.

The characters are all cartoon quality and the backgrounds are highly coloured and very detailed. Your chase takes you out of the laboratory, into a boiler room and out into the street. The further into the game you manage to travel, the more difficult the screens and you must make use of every helpful implement put in your way.

Winches, lifts, moving boxes carry you across gaps or lift you out of harms way.

Tricky Doc requires skill or lots of luck and is well worth a try.

Not the most addictive game in the world, but it's got lots of appeal.

SPY HUNTER II

Another rejuvenated oldie has made it back to the screen.

Spy Hunter II from Bally/Midway is the grown-up sequel to the original Spy Hunter released about two years ago.

I say "grown up" because the screen comes as a bit of a surprise. The game comes in a huge upright cabinet with a vertical split screen for two players.

The second player can join in at any time, and as soon as the money's been gobbled up, his/her car appears on your screen, with your car appearing on your team mate's screen.

Spy Hunter II is very like the original, though the graphics and sound have been beefed up considerably.

Your job is to escort a motorcycle courier to its destination. It's not a simple drive as you soon find out. Rival gangs throw everything they've got at you — dynamite, bombs, rockets, bullets — you name it they'll send it your way — special delivery.

Screaming down the road, with your rev counter going into the red, fumbling with the gears, at the same time trying to shoot and run the baddies off the road is Bally's idea of fun.

Unfortunately, though the new presentation is a whole lot better than the original, that addictive quality is missing.

As a racing game is can't hope to compete with the likes of Out Run.

As with the original version, you have to drive into the back of lorries, Italian Job, style, to obtain extra weapons.

Armed with these — oil slicks, flame guns, wheel spikes and cannons staying alive on the road is much easier.

A radar at the bottom of the screen indicates the direction of the next attack but your main concern will be getting shot of the Cycle Snipers.

Gangs of bikers crowd round the sides of your car blasting away with deadly accuracy. You'll soon notice the bullet holes in your windscreen, showing where shots have caused damage. Too many of these and your car blows up.

Driving into the van is a cinch, just steer towards it and the car miraculously takes over, whizzing you inside with no effort.

It's here that you see that the new version differs from the original You switch into animated cartoon mode. A busty blonde stands at the front of the van holding rockets, cannons or oil hose, bends over, rearms your car and stands up again.

Not a word is spoken, but speech bubbles appear from the van driver who peers through the driver's hatch giving you such helpful hints as "Don't drive drunk" or "Take it easy".

All quite amusing but hardly apt as a drink hasn't passed your lips for the last hour or so!

When two people are playing the game gets more exciting — competition I suppose — as both of you race towards the armoured van.

You'll also find yourself trying to beat your team mate rather than concentrating on the job in hand. The addiction factor goes up at this point

I particularly liked the new dual screen layout but I found the game lacking and soon got bored.

Coin-Op Cheats!

In the March issue Paul Clare wrote in with tips for Bubble Bobble but asked if anyone could tell him what the red ring, the purple ring and the chests do. Well, Paul, John Bect and Jason Beaumont from Scarborough have come to your rescue with the answers, and a bit more besides.

The red ring gives you 100 points and the purple ring gives you 500 points for every jump you make. The chests come in three colours — the blue chest gives you 40,000 points, the grey chest gives 50,000 points and the pink one gives 80,000 points.

- Blue teapot gives you all the rings.
 Red teapot gives all the sweets and rings.
- The clock stops the white monster from coming after you.
- If you still have all your lives when you reach level 50, a stone archway appears land on it and you will be transported forward 20 levels.
- On level 100 you must kill the large monster with lightning bubbles and by collecting a vial on the third platform. You'll need to hit it several times until it changes into a bubble. When it bursts you get one million points.
- Warning: If you are on a two-player game and one of you dies on level 100, you will be zapped back to level 70.

JACKAL

Jackal is a fairly recent game so it's great to have received the following tips from Anand Aggarwal from Northants. Rambo-types start here!

You start the game with boring, slow grenades but it's quite easy to upgrade to missile power. When you grenade certain buildings, a flashing green man runs out — pick him up in your jeep and you'll have the missile power to thwart the enemy.

Collecting lots of these flashing men gives you devastating fire power which copes with most situations.

The missiles explode in four directions and you get an extra 10,000 for every flashing man you collect afterwards.

When your jeep is hit you will revert to minus one power — that is one less powerful missile than you had before you were hit.

Never collect eight POWs. Always collect seven and get an eighth by collecting a "power up". It's possible to get 20,000 points by releasing all eight prisoner in one go.

However, this is very difficult to achieve as a plane normally whizzes down the screen bombing you and the prisoners.

The easiest way to destroy this is to have full power and then continuously fire your missiles upwards, whilst at the same time releasing the prisoners to the waiting helicopter.

COMMANDO

A useful bug has been found in Commando by Fiz who hails from Coventry. He's found a neat way of killing the soldiers without going anywhere near them.

At the end of each area, when the enemy soldiers are pouring out of the game from their compound, move your commando to the bottom of the screen, facing downwards, and start shooting. Your bullets will come down from the top of the screen, killing the soldiers as they run out of the gate, also at the top of the screen. This is a simple way to clear the most difficult part of each section.

GAUNTLET II

Finding ways of getting into the secret rooms in Gauntlet IIcan be maddening. Daniel Osborne who lives in Humberside has come to the rescue with tips on getting into these rooms for both one or more players.

Some rooms can only be entered when more than one player is at the controls.

- Be pushy! Try pushing one of your friends down the exit and you should have no trouble getting into the secret room.
- Don't be greedy! Eat all the food on the screen and you'll have no problems.
- Invulnerability. If there are two, three or four people playing, everyone except one person should use an invulnerability spell or you won't get into that secret room.

These tips work if one — or more — people are playing!

- Transportation. Get a transportation spell after you've cleared the screen of food and other goodies. Then transport off a wall into the exit and you'll find yourself in the secret room.
- Go on a diet! Don't eat any food on the screen.
- Saving super shots. Pick up ten super shots and exit without using any. If you do use some, make sure that when you exit you've collected more to make up ten.
- Wall crunching. Try pushing a wall into the exit. It will crumble and when you go through the exit you'll find yourself in the secret room.

GUNSMOKE

Playing Gunsmoke for hours on end might not be everyone's cup of tea, but Elout De Kok from Holland has found a way to play it which will cost you nothing!

•When you're on level two, make sure you have a horse when you kill Roy Knife. Once Roy is dead, walk over his body and your horse will be killed. Roy now rises from the dead as a sort of indestructible zombie. You can shoot him as often as you like, but he won't die. In this way you can play until you get tired of it.

Can you beat these high scores? Do they show you up for a rank beginner? Wouldn't you like to know if you're King of the Joysticks? Well, here's your chance to get into the UK Hall of Fame. For months now we've been collating all the high scores you send in on your favourite games — so cast your eyes down the following list and let us know if you could do better. Send in your high scores NOW, the newer the game the better but don't forget all those golden oldies.

THE ARCADE SMASH HIT THAT RECREATES THE SPEED AND EXCITEMENT OF THESE CLASSIC ENCOUNTERS

Young or old, whatever your age everyone enjoys the antics of the cunning Road Runner as he baffles and bemuses poor Wile E Coyote. Or does he?...

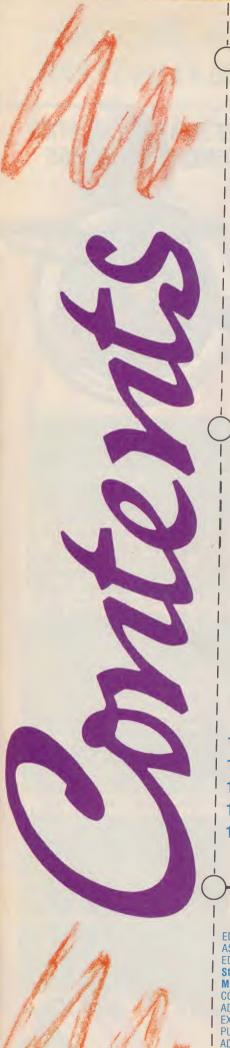

This is your chance to really find out as you take on the role of Road Runner in this comic, all action extravaganza that recreates these nail biting chases and the fast moving excitement to perfection. Speed through canyons and along the highways following the trail of birdseed left for you to feed on (is this the first trick???) Dodge your way round the onrushing trucks keeping an eye out for the perilous mines and feather ruffling, leg busting oil slicks. What dastardly plans has the sleazy Wile E Coyote got in store for you as he lurks in hiding, cowardly awaiting his moment to enjoy a succulent roast of "Road Runner and French Fries". We're sure you'll overcome all the dirty tricks he can throw at you with ease, agility and grace and a haughty "Beep Beep". Overcome them that is if you've got nerves of steel, the reflexes of a wildcat and the speed of the fastest bird on two legs, otherwise its sorry, goodnight and "Burp Burp"!!!

■If you are under 16 you must stop reading this. What follows could put you in grave moral danger.

Atlantis Software has released an "adult" adventure called Dungeons, Amethysts, Alchemists 'n' Everythin'.

It contains the occasional rude word and sexual innuendo, novice nuns, entangled lovers and busty barmaids, according to Atlantis. That's why the game — on the Amstrad — has a warning on it. The cassette blurb also contains an awful spelling mistake — humerous instead of humorous.

■19, the number one hit for Paul Hardcastle, is being turned into a game by Cascade. The player takes the role of a 19-year-old at the time of the Vietman war who is given the choice: "Will you fight the war or the draft?"

If he decides to fight the war the game will proceed with an arcade type action game. If he decides to fight the draft the game will change into a text/graphic adventure with you joining the Peace Corps and campaigning against the war.

The game will feature the charttopping music.

■Atari ST owners can now digitize their own pictures and sample their own choice of sounds for under £80.

Owners of Microdeal's ST-Replay can sample musical instruments, TV speakers or directly through their own hi-fi system.

Once sampled, the sounds no longer needs the replay cartridge if the monitor speaker is used. The cartridge can serve the further purpose of a hi-fi interface, allowing you to replay amplified sounds via you hi-fi.

ST-Replay is supplied as a cartridge which connects directly to the ST via the cartridge port and is capable of sampling from any source similar to the output of a cassette player, hi-fi or compact disc player (via phono plugs).

ST-Replay comes complete with the replay sampling / editing software and ST-echo. Coding is also included for using samples with machine code programs and fast basic, Atari basic and GFA basic

"Hey Yogi, I just heard we're gonna be the first bears featured in a computer game."

"That's right, Boo Boo. It's because we're smarter than average bears."

Piranha will release their game around the lovable Hanna-Barbera cartoon game this autumn. In it Yogi must rescue his faithful old friend Boo Boo from a hunter before the hibernation season comes once again to Jellystone Park.

■The influence of the evil Ming is about to infiltrate a Spectrum, Amstrad, MSX or Atari near you. But never fear, Flash Gordon will save the world.

Mastertronic releases Flash Gordon for these computers it's been out for some months on the Commodore 64 — sometime this month.

Ming has targetted the earth with killer missilies. Ming must die for the earth to live. Good arcade adventure at a cheapo price.

Some of the world's top science fiction and fantasy writers and film makers will be appearing at the 45th Science Fiction Convention this summer.

The convention — called Conspiracy 87 — will be at the Brighton Centre and Metropole Hotel, Brighton, between 27th August and 1st September.

The big names appearing will include Brian Aldiss, Doris Lessing, Larry Niven and Robert Silverberg.

There will also be films, videos, talks, workshops and □Combat School may well do for coin-op manufacturers Konami what Track & Field did for Taito a few summers back.

The game is played on the same lines in that you have to beat your team-mates in a series of 'events' and make sure you finish with a good time to ensure going onto the next challenge.

It's super fast action all the way and possibly even more tiring on the arms and trigger finger than Track & Field. One thing is for certain, it'll make a great conversion for Konami. Speech throughout is very clear, and the events take you through an obstacle course, a shooting range (very difficult), the Iron Man race, arm wrestling, fighting your instructor and actual combat.

Play Combat School and test out your stamina.

□ Weeeee-ooooh! Now this is what I call a coin-op conversion, says C+VG's Tony Takoushi. These pictures come from Sega's own conversion of Space Harrier for their very own Sega System, the new dedicted video games machine. As you can see the graphics come pretty close to the arcade original give or take a sprite or two! The game also comes with a little booklet which gives the first recorded breakdown of ALL the aliens our blond hero in the tight trousers encounters along the

The bad news is we STILL don't know when you'll be able to get your hands on the system, never mind the game! What are these people demonstrations by experts in specialist fields such as computers, role-playing games, space exploration and science.

Space Harrier plays just like the arcade game — although you can't hope to produce the hydraulic action of the real thing — unless you've got one of those chairs which spin up and down of course. More news on the System as soon as we know.

To get in you must be a member of the convention, however you can pay at the door. The cost of adult membership for all six days is £38 and for eight to 14-year-olds it's half price. A single day's membership will cost £10.

■How would you like to have a body like this? OK, so you're not too keen. But how would you like a t-shirt like Paul's wearing? You bet you would. And we've got 20 incredible Konami Nemesis tshirts to GIVE away to the first people to rush us a postcard asking for one. What could be easier? Don't forget to tell us your chest size and remember — postcards

ONLY please. If you're unlucky or you don't fancy your chances, C+VG can offer you a good deal on the Konami Nemesis t-shirts. You can get one direct from WTV Supplies, Bank Buildings, Bank Street, Newton Abbot, Devon, TQ12 2JL for just £3.95 including postage and packing. Just make your cheques / postal orders payable to W+V Supplies and allow 28 days for delivery. As well as t-shirts Konami are also launching a software club details from the above address if you're interested.

■By now the result of the general election should be known. But if you haven't had enough of politics by now you could try playing Virgin's Election.

You play the leader of one of four political parties — Matcher, Ninnock, Owing and Pig-Iron and Daniel Pauls!

Should you wish to buy Election will cost you £9.95 on the C64.

■ Starglider, Rainbird Software's award-winning game, has made its debut on ITV's Saturday morning show Get Fresh, in a nerveracking competition running for 17 weeks from May 9th to August 30th. In a game called Get Mucky, two teams compete for the highest score on two specially adapted Amiga versions of Starglider. At the end of 50 seconds, the winning team has the pleasure of releasing a bucket of water over the unfortunate loser.

■Starlight's autumn releases will include Starfire, an arcade adventure combining strategy, and Red L.E.D. a multi-landscape shoot 'em up. Both games will be out for the Spectrum, Commodore and Amstrad.

■Keep on running! You're almost at the finish of our super Anco Summer Events C16 coupon collection which will enable you to get up to £2 off the price.

Summer Events will cost £9.95 in the shops but thanks to the generosity of Anco you can get £1 or £2 off that price.

Last month we printed our first £1 off token. This month we print the second.

Send your cheques to Anco / C+VG Summer Events, Anco Marketing Ltd, 4 Westgate House Spittall Street, Dartford, Kent.

This offer closes on July 15th.

Mixing business with pleasure is no problem with an Atari 520 ST. Not when you've got over 1,000 software titles to choose from.

You'll find all the latest games and a huge range of business titles from the top business software houses. And the range is growing all the time.

You won't be short of power, either. The Atari 520 ST is twice as powerful as most business micros.

So you'll be able to create spectacular colour graphics. Even animate them to make your own films.

If you're musically minded, you can compose and play a full symphony.

Or, for those who'd rather write programs than music, the 520 ST supports over thirty programming languages.

520 ST WORKS HARD PLAYS HARD

■ Has this cheeky chappie just beaten Sam Fox at strip poker? 'Fraid not — he's just had a complete mental breakdown thanks to those slave drivers at Martech. Poor old programmer Simon Nichol has been working on Mega Apocalypse since completing Crazy Comets in 1985.

Now Martech urgently need highly skilled shoot 'em up playtesters to help push the game to its limits. If YOU would like to help write to Martech.

The Speed King lasts for at least three weeks at a constant 450 waggles per minute, according to tests.

calls from programmers asking how they can protect their creations from poachers and get some sort of copyright coverage. There hasn't been any official way of doing this - until now. The National Software Register, has been set up to solve this and other problems. The only practical recourse to someone selling your program without your permission, and worse, without paying your royalties, is the law of copyright. This is the same law as applies to books and other written material. The law states that the moment the program is written it is your copyright. On receipt of your program the NSR will make a copy for security purposes, storing the original and copy in separate locations. In addition the NSR will issue a Certificate of Registration and a unique number called the NSR Code, which will be displayed on the program as proof of registration. Sounds pretty watertight. Go on. Make a pig of youself and grab a copy of OINK! You won't be sorry. Three addictive games for the price of one make a this a real value for money package.

OK, so the games aren't all original — but they are extremely well put together and programmed by John Williams universe, to get his next issue probably best known for Jet Boot Jack.

The main aim of the game is to help Uncle Pigg, the porky proprietor of OINK!, the cult out on time.

Here at C+VG we know ALL about the hazards of producing a magazine — but we've never had to contend with Pete's

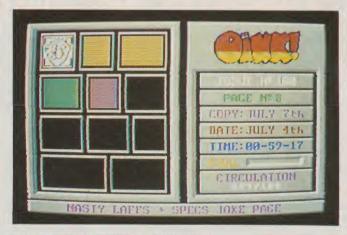

Pimple, Rubbishman or Tom Thug when we're attempting to beat our deadlines. But YOU will if you decide to take on the editorship of Oink!

The idea is quite simple really. You play the three subgames to earn points and win parts of pages which you use to fill up your issue of Oink!

You can read the panels you win as you go — these contain words of wisdom, jokes and puzzles. Studying these panels provides a break from the rantic action of the games themselves

As you play you build up your circulation — can you beat C+VG's 106.571?

Let's take a look at the three sub-games one by one. First up is Pete's Pimple. Like the other games this is basedextremely loosely — on characters from the comic. This is Arkan-Oink or maybe even Krak-Oink! A straightforward

It's been an incredible 18 months or so since word of this martial arts epic began to spread. Now I can proudly

Fans of System 3 games will combination of fighting, exploration, strategy, object finding, all mix up with some really excellent music which, besides providing a background to the game, considerably enhances the atmosphere and adds to the excitement.

The game is big, coming in six loads. In some games multi-loading can hinder the smoothness of play but with The Last Ninja that doesn't happen. The ultimate aim of the games is to guide the Ninja and find the secret scrolls hidden in the palace at the end of the weapons he has to start with are his hands and feet. By exploring everywhere he can collect a sword, throwing stars, staff, flails and smoke bombs. You really have to search for difficult to find.

The first two loads are set in what could be described as a wilderness outside the palace, filled with swamps, rivers, shrines, trees, bushes, birds, evil guards and dragons.

That was especially true for me on C+VG's battered

But the trick of picking up an object is a little difficult. Getting in the right position is essential. You have to sort of bend and get the ninja's hands to reach out and touch the object.

That's okay if you can see it. But sometimes the object is totally hidden, such as the extra Breakout type game.

You bounce Pete's Pimple around the screen knocking out the blocks and blasting oncoming aliens and collecting mystery bonuses. There are 12 different screens. Clear ten and all the panels on page one of your issue will be filled then go back and play the two other screens for bonus panels which you can place where you like in your magazine.

Nubbishman is a horizontally scrolling Zaz-Oink! You guide the refuse collecting superhero through six hazard filled zones zapping objects and collecting rubbish.

Each zone is split into two sections. In the first you have to control Rubbishman's altitude by moving the joystick left and right while blasting away at the same time.

He has to fly under and over hazards while dodging around others — flashing grids, grey areas and walls are deadly to our hero. Earn extra points by hitting blocks marked with question-marks.

Fly at ground level as much as possible, as flying high uses up energy at a faster rate — and Rubbishman can collapse just as easily from lack of power.

At the end of each zone Rubbishman enters a section where the controls are altered.

Here he has to dodge oncoming objects and nasties. Some can be destroyed, others can't. Oil barrels give him more power when blasted.

Complete a zone and you get a bonus panel. This is possibly the most difficult game to get into in the package until you get the hang of left/right joystick movements controlling your altitude and working out what you can fly over without getting

After getting to grips with those simple principles you'll be able to enjoy an entertaining shoot em up.

Tom Thug? Well, if you're as old as me you'll remember a brilliant coin-op called Berserk. Tom Thug is Bers-Oink! Well, almost. It's a mixture of that and the Gauntlet style of game currently trendy among gamesters

You manoeuvre Tom's Thug mobile around, zapping robots and paralysing deadly homing droids, while desperately searching for bonus blocks which, when destroyed, give you all manner of different goodies.

To my mind this is the best of the three games — fast moving and challenging. Worth the asking price on its own.

Watch out for the campaigner for public morals, Mary Lighthouse, who wants to stop Uncle Pigg doing his job.

If you don't know the comic it doesn't matter in the least. The games don't have that much to do with it apart from using the character's names.

All you DO have to know is that OINK! represents the new trend towards value for money packages from software

OINK! is brilliant value for money and the games are all very playable.

Namco's Metrocross hits the small screen as US Gold kick off their string of coin-op conversion releases for the

The original Namco coin-op wasn't a classic by any means and the US Gold programmers haven't done a bad job converting it. But I found early levels too easy to play and later levels too difficult.

More on that later — but in case you haven't seen the game before, here's a quick run down on what it's all about.

You find yourself in the running shoes of a futuristic jogger out to break speed records in a marathon race across a 23rd century city. The streets are full of hazards static, mobile and explosive. It's your task to run, jump and dodge as fast as you can and beat the clock — earning mega-points and progressing to the next, more difficult level.

That's the idea — how about the execution? Well, as you'd expect, the Atari ST version looks closest to the original although the jogger character is tiny. Scrolling is pretty smooth and the tune almost identical to the original. Graphics are nice — watch out for the Coke cans. The Coke cans feature in the Amstrad version too — but the graphics are generally chunky and the animation of your jogger is fairly crude. Perhaps the most disappointing version is on the 64. Once again you're faced with chuncky graphics. The music is good — but just try playing the game with it turned off. Where are the sound effects? A few bleeps and burps for jumps and an explosion sound for the landmines. That's it. No running sounds at all. You might find yourself captured by the game for short periods — but unless you REALLY loved the coin-op original and don't want to spend any more money trying to beat it, I reckon you might find the asking price of nearly £10 for some versions a bit too much.

Race

Get on yer bike! No, this isn't old Norman telling you what's good for you again. It's a topical game from the budgetmasters released in time to coincide with the Milk Race -- the round Britain cycle marathon which rivals the Tour de France.

The computer version' is a lot easier on the body than the real 1,000 mile bash from Newcastle to London - but it's still a challenging game to attempt. At first glance you might think, ho-hum, this isn't so hot.

But grab your joystick and start pedalling and you'll soon be hooked.

Milk Race is basically a horizontally scrolling dodge and weave game.
Your rider has to avoid being

KO'd by other riders and cars while aiming to pick up as many bottles of milk as he can to keep all important energy levels up.

Make sure you keep an eye on the gears as well. You're in charge of a slick 12-speed racing bike here and gear changes are crucial to a good time on special stages.

Some sections of the race are timed, some aren't. Fail to complete a timed section within the limit and it's all over. And watch your energy meter. 1,000 miles is a long way and you don't want to burn out before you reach the finish line, do you?

To start with you'll find yourself on your bum in the road most of the time — riders and cars coming up from behind can knock you off as easily as potholes and crashes.

The road gradients vary as you race — that's where a quick gear change will gain you vital time — and maybe an extra few places in the race.

There are 84 other riders to pass before you hit the lead position.

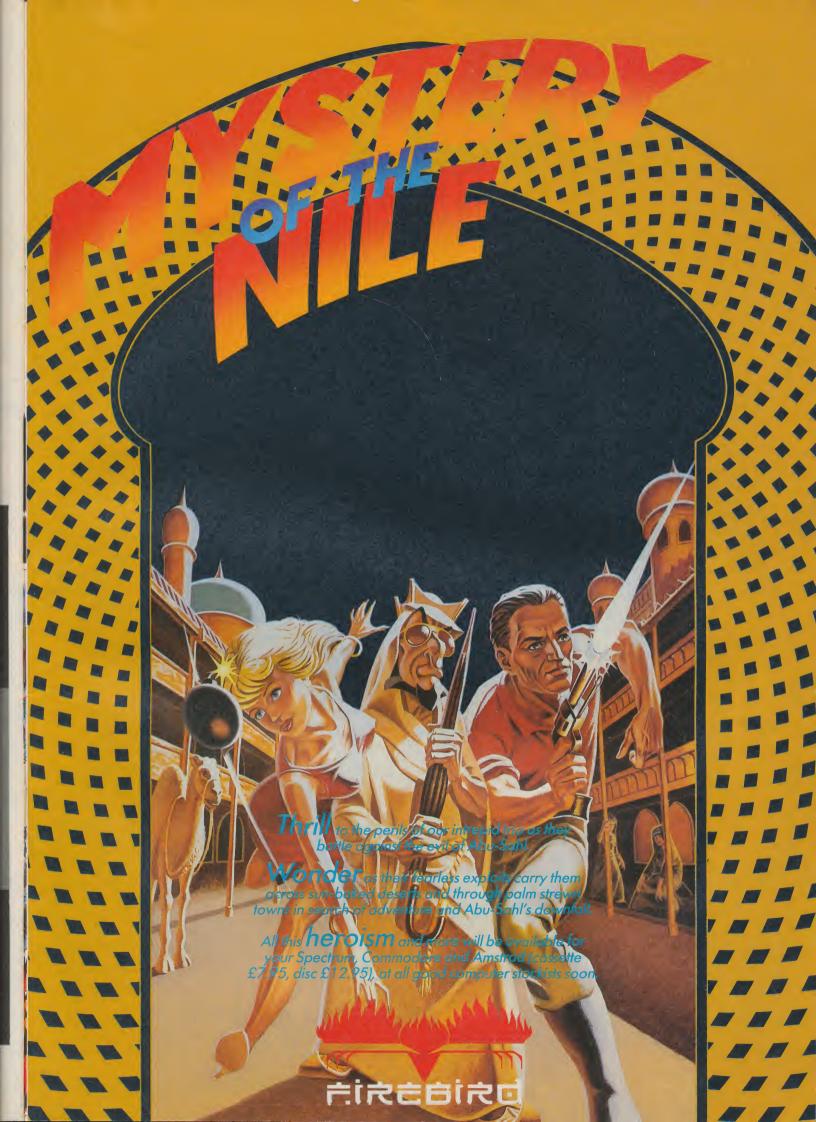

Background graphics — crowds and landscape — are attractive, and scrolling and animation are smooth. There's a nice driving tune to keep things moving along as well.

Milk Race doesn't break any new ground in gameplay — bu it is entertaining, exciting, topical and good value for just two quid.

Every so often a game arrives in the office with out fuss or fanfare which exudes quality, cleverness, ace graphics, brilliant sound and that elusive of all properties, originality. Welcome to Wizball.

Step right into the colourful realms of Wizworld where the Wiz and his cat lived happily until the evil Zark stole all the colour making it dull and grey. Controlling Wizball, and its servant Catelite, you've got to restore Wizworld to its former brilliance.

Each of Wizworld's
landscapes is made up of three colours. By shooting the red, green and blue colour bubbles and getting Cat to collect the droplets as they shower to the ground, it's possible to fill the cauldrons displayed at the bottom of the screen until the target colour is achieved.

When you zap an alien, green pearls are deposited on the screen. If Wizball can pass over it and pick it up it lights the first icon at the top of the screen. The Wiz can now select the feature. Obviously the more pearls collected, the more weapons available.

Icon one: Gives more control over the Wizball, allowing it to move left and right. Antigrav halts the perpetual bouncing of the Wizball.

Icon two: Beam — the supabeam weapon. Double - both the Wiz and cat get automatic two-directional fire power.

Icon three: Catelite — Wiz gets a cat.

Icon four: Blazers -- Super power for the Wiz and cat. Icon five: Wizz Spray — mega spray protection. Cat Spray—same for the furry one.

lcon six: Shields—limited protection for Wiz and cat.
lcon seven: Smart Bomb—

the ultimate killer.

The Wizball is fiendishly difficult to control first of all, almost to the point of hairtearing frustration. If I had a gripe about this game it is that it's a little too difficult to get going.

By the way, check out how the Wizball materialises on the screen. It appears to come out of its own mouth. Clever that.

You can put spin on the ball using the joystick, hitting the fire button fires the weapons.

I've managed to get round the first three levels — you drop through holes, tubes or craters to achieve this.

From the house which brought you Way of the Tiger and Avenger comes their newest em-up, Samurai Trilogy.

Based on the ancient samurai warriors, the game is a combat simulation in the vein of Fist. In this one you have to train in various formats — karate, kendo and then samurai — to achieve the ultimate title, Samurai War

The three different styles have their own set moves, but you only get about three attacking ones to choose from in each. The moves are spin kick (roundhouse), punching and a

Then you may re-select if you think he will mash you.
If he looks OK, you then allocate five points between the four fighting attributes, skill, speed, stamina and strength.

Why did they miss out brains? You must do this twice, once for attack and again for defence, after which you fight.
As soon as the fighting screen pops up, you notice the game's worst point, the graphics. The graphics, if you can call them that, are of a Vic-20 standard, featuring yellow characters with eyes like cylon warriors.

After the initial shock is over, you must get down to it. Your attack and defence strength bars are shown in red, your opponent's in blue. The idea is to bash your opponent's defence to nothing.

This is easier said than done, and as you have a time limit, it becomes even more infuriating. Many's the time my opponent had only a pixel left on this bar, while I was still strong, and the time ran out. Annoying or what?

After each fight you must re-select your attack/defence strategy, while doing this you are supposed to be meditating.

Should you beat all your opponents, you may move on to kendo, and then samuria.

Samurai Trilogy was a great idea, but failed mostly because of the graphics and terrible standard of animation. How software companies can release stuff with such a naff arrangement of pixels I'll never Stryfe is a plan-view, multiscreen arcade adventure from the French studio ERE, who produced the excellent Get Dexter and Macadam Bumper for PSS.

Set in the magical Kingdom of Faerie, two gnomes take on the might of the Powers of Evil, led by The Great Morvelinh who, according to the sleeve notes, is 'the least known of all demons'!

As you know, gnomes come in all shapes and sizes, well one size actually — small. Some become great fighters, others renowned sorcerers, but all are well versed in the art of magick.

Stryfe features two legendary gnomes in Vlamir, a top-notch sorcerer, and Olaf, who makes Rambo look like a who makes Rambo look like a performing flee. Your job is to guide one or both of these half-pint heroes through countless regions of the kingdom, destroying the Gates of Evil en route. Since Morvelinh's rise to power, many thousands of horrid beings have poured through the Gates of Evil and infested Faerie. These include Kobolds, Green Sprites, Trolls and Phantoms, all of which have different characteristics, mostly mean.

Various objects can be collected to help you with your quest. Of these, the most useful are keys and potions. Golden keys give you access to the next region of Faerie. You can only pick up a gold key when in possession of a silver one.

If Vlamir, the sorcerer, uses a potion, it will destroy all enemies together with any Gates of Evil on the screen. A potion in Olaf's hands will only destroy the gates. Other objects include hams for extra energy and a chest containing money and experience points. Each region of Faerie is dotted with trees, lakes, buildings, walls (that form mazes in some levels), hills, columns, and, of course, a liberal smattering of Evil Gates. All of which block your path. Often you'll have to use a potion in order to get to a key or the exit to another region.

The screen is divided into the action area, occupying the top two thirds, and a status area containing the vital statistics of each gnome. Here you'll see an

Then it's time to ram your helmet over your ears and prepare to get battered. The screen swaps from the playing field screen where all the action takes place to the menu screen where you choose your next play and see how the opposition defeated your last match winning move, Score a touchdown and the crowd cheers — but there aren't any cute cheerleaders jumping up and down to spur your team on to further glory.

At the end of the game you see a scoreboard — that's it. No victory march or any other celebration. A bit disappointing

And the instructions say you can set up again by simply hitting the RESTORE key which will restart the game. Not on my copy it didn't — and I was sorely tempted not to bother to reload GFL Championship Football is a nice try which doesn't quite come off — it lacks the essential action ingredient vital for this sort of game. So far none of the US Football Games have managed to capture the REAL spirit of the game — like the 10-Yard Fight coin-op did for instance.

MACHINE: SPECTRUM SUPPLIER: DURELL PRICE: £7.95 REVIEWER: PAUL

There can't be many games around to feature a woman as the main character. Well, Durell has broken this sex barrier with Saboteur II — Avenging Angel. It's a pity the game is not better. As a sequel it's not as good as the highly enjoyable Saboteur.

The plot of the first game had the Ninja breaking into a dicator's central security building then stealing a computer disk which contained the names of rebel leaders. And information about his

In Avenging Angel you play the role of the Ninja's beautiful sister. She must hang-glide into the dictator's new command centre and office complex on top of a mountain which is also filled with underground tunnels and caverns. The game sprawls over 700 screens.

She must search for pieces of punched computer tape that control the missile flight paths, redirect the missiles before blast off and then escape by motorbike via the complex's one and only exit.

Most of the screen is taken up with the playing area display. Objects which you are near such as a spanner or word — are displayed. You can take the object which is then displayed in another box. Some objects are show as a question mark There's also a timer which ticks off the vital moments before the missile launch. There's also a "pay display" which shows the Ninja's earnings. These go up as you collect pieces of tape or successfully defeat the baddies wandering around the complex.

Your energy level is represented as a red bar.

You start the game high in the sky on a hang-glider moving high above the complex. Hitting the fire button will release you and then it's a long drop down onto the complex. Judging the right moment is a bit tricky. Some drops are longer than others. Sometimes you can fall for ages and when you eventually hit the ground your energy drops alarmingly and you'll be in no state to fight off any guards.

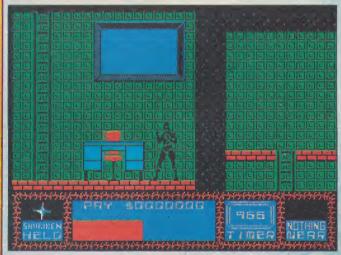

Once down all you have is a small map outline of the complex. So you're not entirely clueless but a more detailed map will be essential. The whole place is patrolled by guards and pumas. The guards have knives and flame throwers. The cassette notes also mention vampire bats, but I didn't see any of these Fighting is typical stuff, all leaps, kicks and punches. Quite frankly, it's all very tame stuff and not particularly exciting.

After the first Saboteur this game is dull. Avenging Angel?

Is this the latest Stephen King novel or a set of game instructions? There's enough reading in the blurb for The Wiz to last you a week — well, a couple of days anyway

And yes, you just HAVE to read it this time. There's no way you'll get away with sitting down and playing the game straight off — you'll end up going nowhere fast.

That's the bad news. Once you mastered the instructions you can go on and master the game. Which isn't half bad really. At first glance it looks like yet another Gauntlet clone your little Wiz whizzes around zapping creatures, zombies and anything else that wants to stop him completing his task which is? Just read on .

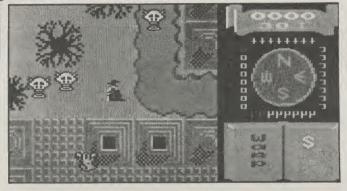

As every day passes, more and more evil burst through from the dark side. It seems obvious to you, a mere first level wizard, that the long forewarned meeting of the worlds is imminent. On the Magical Isle, where in places the worlds of light and dark touch, the manifestations of evil are reaching epidemic proportions.

The Council of Wizards are reluctant to act. They see no way of preventing the disaster other than destroying the ancient links between worlds. In doing so they would lose much of their magic as two of the four runes from which spells are prepared can only be found in the world of darkness.

Despairing at their greed for magic, you resolve to act alone. You must become a powerful fifth level wizard, acquire the spell you need to break the links and separate the two worlds forever.

The council has already learnt of your quest and seek to prevent you completing it. By their own rules they are barred from interfering with the magical advancement of a wizard. Consequently, no wizard can refuse to teach you spells of your magical level unless you have been openly hostile towards him.

Despite this, they have other means of obstructing you. Your shielding against attack, normally maintained for lower level wizards by the fifth level masters, has been removed. As a result, you are now vunerable to the power draining attacks of evil beings.

As if this were not enough, it is rumoured that Tracer has been summoned and, should you stay in one place for long, it will find you and come through from the dark side. Once in this world, it will pursue you relentlessly.
You start the game and you will see your wizard in the centre of playing area. At the top right of screen there is a scroll containing your current score, magical power and wizard level.

At the bottom right of the screen there is a spell book open at the "Zap 1" spell description.

Wiz operates in four modes: Move and cast, Prepare Spell, Read Spell Book, Buy Spell. Move and cast mode:

This is represented by a Red Medallion. As you move, an arrow will show you your direction on the medallion. By pressing fire or space you cast the last selected spell. Beware though, as colliding with evil beings drains your power. Every time you cast a spell you use up one unit of magical power. If you run out of power vou die!

Prepare spell mode:

To move into this mode from Move and Cast press the space bar. You will now notice that the medallion has changed. It is now blue and has runes in place of direction arrows.

To select a rune, move the joystick toward the desired rune. Spells are prepared by selecting the rune in the correct sequence and then pressing fire.

As you select each rune it appears in the scroll above the medallion and the appropriate rune level goes down.

When you press fire the spell book will display the details of the spell you just prepared. Spells can only be cast by pressing fire when in move and cast mode.

Read spell book mode:

Once entering this mode from Prepare Spell mode you will notice that the medallion has again changed.

It is now grey with only three directions marked. By moving the joystick left and right you can read through the spell book which contains all the spells you have learnt so far, plus the ones you started off with.

Wiz only lets you prepare spells currently in the book.

Buy spell mode:

The medallion changes again. It is now purple with up to four different symbols.

If a wizard is on the screen when you enter this mode, the medallion shows the symbols of the spells he is qualified to

There may be up to three. You can preview these spells buy selecting the appropriate direction. Press fire and you will try to buy the highlighted spell. Note that the "Up" option means "buy no spell" and will take you back into move and cast.

A preview appears in the spell book and normally shows the name of the spell the symbol for the spell; the amount of magical power you will use up learning the spell, and wizard level you must attain before trying.

Attempting to buy a spell for which you do not have enough power will kill you! Or failure to buy the spell is indicated by the spell book page becoming blank.

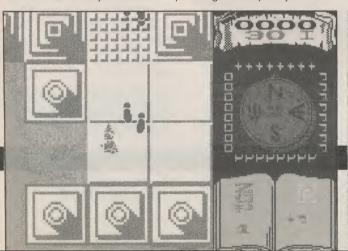

Keep an eye on your score everytime you try something new and you will soon learn the best way to achieve a high score.

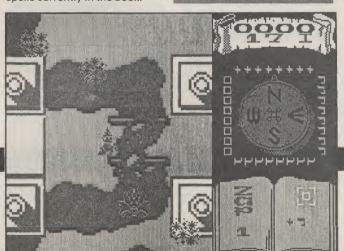

However, getting a high score isn't just a matter of personal pride, it is the way to higher wizard levels.

Lots to do as you can see so the lastability of this game is guaranteed. Playability? Well, I have to say that I found it difficult to get to grips with the game to start with.

But spend a bit of time on Wiz and you'll be rewarded with an entertaining arcade adventure.

As the sequel to the successful Yie Ar Kung-Fu, Shao Lin's Road was a natural candidate for yet another coin-op

The game sticks prefty much to the original arcade, in which our hero Lee, having finally mastered the secret martiál art Chin's Shao-Lin, decides to hit the road. Or after he tries to, but is stopped by hoards of Triads who trap him in the temple.

Controls include kick, jump over adversaries, jump up and down between the three levels of the temple, and the use of magic powers — picked up from time to time when knocking off other opponents.

Considering the limitations of the machine, this conversion is not at all bad, that is if you want to play yet another martial arts game. The sad thing is that Shao Lin is basically a watered down version of Datasoft's two year old his Bruce Lee, but without the depth offered by that great golden oldiel. that great golden oldie!

Durell has converted this three part, seven level arcade oddity to the Amstrad. But the question is why? Having previously failed to set the world on fire with Spectrum and Commodore versions of Sigma 7. And considering the current miserable climate for Amstrad games, one wonders whether it was worth it.

The game itself draws on Zaxxon for part one, Pacman in part two, and Bobby Bearing to round off proceedings in part three. Unfortunately, at no stage, does Sigma 7 recapture the graphical or entertainment excellence achieved by these

From a technical perspective, the conversion is at best average, resulting in clumsy screen handling and frustrating gameplay, especially in part one. At a price of £7.95, this is the kind of full priced title that must make Mastertronic rub their hands with glee. Unless you've got good reason, give this one a miss.

Fight Night has to be the best boxing game around that I know of. I normally dislike games based on this type of subject but this is the only exception. The way the computer controlled boxer performs his special move is quite humorous, but if they land are very serious. Hu Him's speciality move is a flying drop kick to the stomach, but the others have different specialities which you can find out for yourself.

Another thng that improves this game is that you can define your own boxer and then train him to build his muscles up. The construction of a boxer is very simple and easy to follow, when you are happy with the boxer it can be saved to disc but not to cassette. An option for sparring is also included so you can try out your boxer in the ring without losing any moral. The disc version also includes an option for tournament play which allows for two boxers (human controlled) to pit their wits against each other in the

The graphics are very well defined, as is the sound with various tunes to be heard upon losing or winning. The sound of the boxer being hit is of the highest quality. The value of Fight Night increases if you are buying the disc version.

Robbbot (no that isn't a mistake, there are meant to be three Bs) promises to have a 'highly original scenaraio.'

What that means is that a space ship returning from a long voyage is running short of fuel and is forced to land on the planet lo because the on-board computer has detected energy resources. Using three "robbbots" you must get fuel back to the ship.
If that's what a "highly

Yes, this game is one of those ordinary, it happens every day, type of games. X.R, as I shall refer to him, must find the portal so that he can get back to his own world, sorry, Multiverse.

TECHNICAL SUPPORT

We are looking for a very rare breed of person to assume a technical support role in our newly established Software Development Group, The Software Studios.

This rewarding position commands a varied list of duties; the work is challenging and requires a working knowledge of 6502 and/or Z80, and familiarity with most popular home microcomputers. You will work closely with our Product Management team and freelance software developers assisting and resolving any technical issues that may arise, in addition to managing product testing.

Additionally, you will assess new hardware and advise the Group on various technical matters. An understanding of cassette and diskette mastering would be an advantage, as would knowledge of protection techniques for home computer software.

If such a responsible and varied position would suit you, please send a current C.V. to:

Brilliant! That's the only word to describe Hydrofool — the continuing adventures of

There I was, bored of playing games. Yes, I have to admit it. You know how it is. You've had a day where nothing has gone right — your mum has found your favourite dodgy mag under the bed, Enduro Racer holds no more challenges and you keep getting wiped out on the first stage of Nemesis.

Then, sneakily, along comes a game that takes you by surprise and keeps you up until the early hours, restoring your faith in the great games programmer in Hydrofool is one of these games. It's fun, terminally addictive and packed full of puzzles and jokes. If you thought Sweevo's World was the bees knees then you're going to go completely O.T.T over Hydrofool. The plot? Do you really want one? OK, here it Sweevo, fresh from his success on his "world", returns to the Robo-Master only to be given another great job cleaning out the Deathbowl. Now, the Deathbowl is a giant planet-sized aquarium which has become so polluted and packed with mutant creatures that the only thing to do with it

Sweevo, armed with a deep sea diving suit, has to find the objects that will release the four plugs and empty the planet by placing them on pedestals in the "plug rooms".

The objects are scattered around 200 rooms over six levels. Some are guarded some aren't. But you'll have to work out just what to do with what. And it's fun finding out!

Sweevo can fight off the aquatic enemies using weapons he finds in the many cavernous rooms. I've worked out a few harpoons get rid of baby whales

(what about Greenpeace?!). spoons kill off jellyfish, while horseshoes wipe out, what else, Seahorses.

Other objects help — a bone lures nasty shoals of Sweevo nibbling fish away while he collects a gnome. Why a gnome? Who knows — a further exploration of the game should explain.

You'll have to learn how to use air bubbles to take you from level to level, or simply help Sweevo overcome other obstacles. Ride the bubbles to find out how high they'll take you. You'll soon discover where they take ou. You'll also have to ride bubbles to reach certain objects tucked away in seemingly unreachable ledges in some of the rooms.

Whirlpools transport Sweevo to lower levels. Some of them are sneakily placed just inside doors - so you end up being sucked down even if you don't want to go!

Sweevo can collect anti-rust oil to keep his suit going in the polluted waters. It rusts as soon as you enter the water. Run out of oil and it's back to the surface again.

Clues and jokes appear in message windows at the bottom left hand side of the screen - which is similar in layout to Sweevo's World.

You can start the game from any one of four different locations — but can anyone tell me why they are all named after Elvis Presley songs? Return to Sender, Jail House Rock, O Sole O Mio and Heartbreak Hotel is this another subtle Greg Follis plan? Answers on a postcard please!

The excellent music — yes, even on a Spectrum — comes from none other than Rob Hubbard — and is more than just a collection of beeps and burps. Graphics are — as you'd expect from Gargoyle — pretty neat. I particularly like the baby

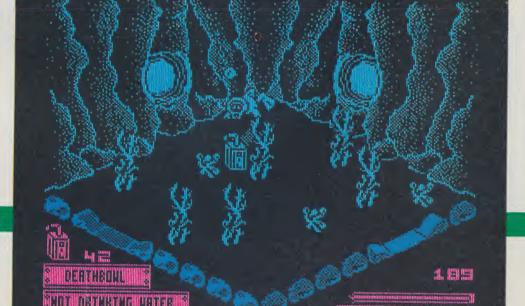

Overall, Hydrofool is the most fun you'll have with your Spectrum this summer — probably this year. The best game on the Amstrad since Batman. If you thought the arcade adventure was dead, think again — and think about raiding your piggy bank to collect the cash for your very own copy of Hydrofool. Don't miss this one.

Stop press! Just discovered that harpoons kill of the 'orrible Wolf Fish and that the Amstrad version is just as addictive as the Spectrum game. And as an extra added tip look "inside" the pedestals in the plug room for a clue to the objects you need

MACHINES: SPECTRUM/CBM 64/AMSTRAD/IBM PC SUPPLIER: MELBOURNE HOUSE PRICE: SPECTRUM (£7,95) AMSTRAD/CBM 64 (£8.95) REVIEWER: PAUL

Question: What is the name of the game in which you zoom off into the depths of space, trading with aliens, buying food, fuel and dodging the interplanetary police? Answer: Enterprise. That fooled you. Hands up everybody who said Elite. Thought so. Well you would be forgiven for Enterprise is unbelievably like the classic Elite. If I were unkind I'd say these games could be identical twins.

In Enterprise you play the part of an entréprenéur or, to put it more accurately, a crook.

Having decided to set yourself up as Interplanetary Merchant Pilot you find you haven't got the readdies to buy a space ship. So you whip one which displeases the law and means you're in for a stiff prison sentence if you stick around. Then it's off to deep space with the aim of earning enough money to retire to the Paradise Planet.

You do this by collecting minerals and selling them to anyone who's fool desperate — enough to buy

As well as selling to them, you can buy food, fuel, and insurance from the traders and get your ship repaired. Some traders are more friendly and more honest than others. The price you receive depends not only upon the state of the economy, but also the rarity of the minerals on that particulary

Every so often, you see screen shots, for a forthcoming release, that are so mouthwatering you simply have to have that game the day it's planet. Most traders offer discount on bulk items and be careful not to lose your noclaims bonus on the insurance.

THE RESERVE TO SERVE THE PARTY OF THE PARTY

Despite receiving interest on your money from the "Ron Nice ' credit agency the amount of money required to retire rises incessantly with inflation.

You also have an Inventory which provides you with all the information about your current status, bank balance, retirement target, insurance cover. insurance premium, food supplies, and amount and type of minerals carried in the cargo bay

A damage report gives the staus of all the ships primary equipment. Engines, boosters, fuselage, landing gear, photon shield, cargo bay door, food storage system and braking system.

Damage may be done to the ship either by collision with minerals police ship or during entry into the atmosphere. Damage to the engines or boosters will cause them to run less efficiently, using more fuel until their eventual failure.

To claim on your insurance policy you must first take out a policy from one of the aliens. The price is based on the status of the items being insured and the economy of the planet you buy it from. If you issue a subsequence claim on your policy then the item claimed upon (Ship, Food, Fuel) will be returned to the condition it was in when the policy was formed.

Moving the cursor with the joystick onto any of the palnets shown on the sreen that are within your hyperjump range. Press fire on planet to see the characteristics of that planet and set the hyperjump coordinates, fire to return to

When trading with alien you may say anything you wish. They usually enjoy idle chat and the less helpful of them often try to digress, but by chatting to them it is possible to ascertain more about their general character and lifestyle which will be useful to you in future.

aunched if not sooner. Ball

Breaker is one such game. Essentially, Ball Breaker is ED Breakout turned on its side. The action takes place in a metal panelled room.

All the blocks, pyramids, spheres, diamonds etc, to be destroyed, are ranged along the left-hand wall, although these sometimes encroach right up to the opposite wall of the room along which you move your bat, which looks like a multicoloured Liquorice Allsort.

Level one is quite easy as all the blocks are arranged in a wall, quite a way back from your bat. Any block hit by the ball immediately explodes, creating a hole in the wall which is immediately filled by any blocks from above which drop down to fill the gap.

As you progress through the ame you'll come across many different blocks and objects, all with differing properties. Some speed the ball up, while others cause it to bounce off the walk. From level two onwards. Things get much more frantic with funny animals perching on pedestals, ready to surge forward and distintegrate your Missiles will also destroy any blocks on the screen, but should only be used in moments of acute embarassement, because your stock will soon run dry. The number of missiles remaining is shown in an extremely flash, but almost totally useless, status area.

Although the design of the graphics in Ball Breaker are extremely good, the gameplay is positively awful. The movement of your bat is slowed down by other things happening on the screen.

Add to this the difficulty of judging where your bat is in relation to the ball, the total absence of any instructions, and a level so difficult that many players may never get past it, and you've got a recipe for disaster!

Although graphically and musically stunning, and a brave innovative idea, Ball Braker falls heavily at the last hurdle because it simply isn't playable compared with the Arkanoid and Krakout.

MACHINE: CBM 64/SPECTRUM AMSTRAD SUPPLIER: STARLIGHT SOFTWARE PRICE: £8.99 (SPECTRUM)/ £9.99 (CBM 64) VERSION REVIEWED: SPECTRUM REVIEWER: STEVE

Now this is the mission. It is 2187 and your name is Rhett Dexter (sorry about that). An anomaly has appeared in the Alpha Centuri sector, a hole through which come invasion craft from another dimension. The only way to close the hole is with nine of the one hundred pieces of the warp field generator hidden by the old ones throughout the universe. You steal a new interstellar fighter and take off for the stars

Basically, Dogfight 2187 is another space shoot-'em-up. At each screen the player has to shoot down all the "invasion craft" in the sector, which gains him one piece of generator. In some sectors he also gets the chance to refuel in the "rotating vector graphic squares" of a nearby planet. He can then warp into the next sector to take on the next set of invaders, eventually coming to the sector containing the hole, which he plugs with his piece of generator and goes back for more. All this is run by a thirtyminute real-time clock, which is the time he has to complete the mission disappointing, the enemy fighters being only shown in wire-frame, and the planets as a series of concentric squares. Anyone who is not a very fast shot will also find themselves running out of fuel and ammunition long before they can find a planet. The instruction booklet (in four languages) is no help at all in discovering how to prevent this. The big appeal of the game is that it offers two side-by-side cockpit displays, and can be played three-handed: by one player against the computer, two players against each other, or two players against the computer

The graphics are

Trust Binary Vision to come up with something different. Well, they had to go some to follow Zoids didn't they.

Well, Stifflip isn't Zoids II, but it does use some of the neat "windowmation" that you came to know and love after playing that first classic game. Stifflip is very clever and very playable.

If you read our preview a couple of issues back you'll know that the Binary programmers delved back into the Boy's Own adventure style stories to bring you an icon driven graphic adventure featuring dastardly deeds in a banana republic.

The screen is set up like a comic book page — the pictures are drawn cartoon style and you get two panels of

The first of these icons is as Chinwag, the second is the Fisticulf's icon, the third is Beetle-off, the fourth is Do One's Stuff, the fifth is State of Play and the sixth is Change Batter. All pretty easy to understand.

On the right hand side of the screen shot you will see these icons showing three different characters. The top character who has the eyepatch is Colonel R.G. Bargie, the second is Professor Braindeath and the third is Miss Palymra Primbottom.

The first character you get to control is Viscount Stifflip himself. Look at our screen

The fact that he is next to the character in the immediate past means one of

The four characters each have a role to play in the adventure so you won't be able to complete it unless you keep them all fit and well. Each carries things which come in useful — but you might have to swap them around in certain circumstances to achieve the desired effect.

Read the speech bubbles and examine each "page" carefully for clues to the riddles which open up areas of the adventure to further perusal.

There's plenty of humouryou may not laugh out loud but you'll definitely snigger to yourself.

Following the success of C+VG's MSX-tra in June, Guy Langley is back with another round-up of games for his fav machine. Feud and Auf Wiedersehen Monty come out tops.

It must be well over a year since the last Monty game was released, and I bet you thought Gremlin had forgotten the furry superhero.

Well, you got it wrong. Au Wiedersehen Monty is the best yet, and, as is usual from Gemlin, it just oozes with quality Poor Monty is still persecuted, and has fled Britain hasn't got time to lie in the sun swigging Coke. No, that wouldn't make much of a game, would it? Internole are hot on Monty's trail, and the only way he can elude them is to buy a Greek island, where he can escape extradition.

Unfortunately, Greek islands cost quite a bit, and even giving up reading C+VG wouldn't help to pay so poor old Monty-has to

to pay, so poor old Monty has to trek all over Europe collecting money to buy it.

And, as usual, there are plenty of puzzles to solve along the way, as well as nasties by the bucketful.

You start off in Gibraltar, which consists of only one screen, and from there, you must go through every country in Europe, including Moledavia. Problems range from a bullfight in Spain, to a chance to race in the Monaco Grand Prix.

Now for Bulldog's Feud.
Down in little Dullford, trouble is brewing. The two wizards, Learic (you) and Leanon'c just can't decide who is the top wiz. So, like all good wizards, the've stopped speaking to each other, and started trying to zap each other instead. Now nobody is safe, as the two bumbling wizards prow the village, doing their hardest to fry each other. You have a total of 12 spells at your disposal, but to cast them, you must collect the two herbs that each one requires. The herbs are grown mainly in Heike's herb garden, but watch out. Heike doesn't take too kindly to you pinching his herbs, and he chases you doggedly, bringing your energy down whenever he touches you. He doesn't seem to notice old Leanoric, though, which seems a bit unfair to me.

Once you have your herbs, you mix them in your cauldron, and then take off after Leanoric, following your compass, which always points towards him. It is best to mix more offensive spells, such as fireball and lightning bolts, because these can be used more than once. and very often, your shots go wide.

Don't miss Feud - at only £1.99, its a virtual steal, and it'll have you playing long into the night. In Mastertronic's Terminus the Wanglers are on the loose, and they're out to bust their leader, Brains, out of the clink. You, of course, get the job of helping them. But this breakout is no in and out job. Brains is held on Terminus, a prison planet, infested with monster and traps, and spread over 500 reens. And, as the year is 5027, the planet is so hi-tech that you have a computer to open the doors for you. Well, humans shouldn't have to do such menial tasks!

You have at your disposal the four wanglers, Magno, Xann, Mobod and Spex, all who have strange characteristics

For instance, Spex likes to bounce about, Magno prefers to suck onto walls, and Mobod and Xann favour the good old anti-grav suit.

Terminus is great value at £1.99 for those poor, half game starved MSX-er Ever fancied flying a Sea King helicopter? Well, now is your chance. Thanks to Players, masters of the mediocre, you get a chance to actually fly this powerful chopper, and try to rescue the 25 seamen, stranded behind enemy lines, or in the P.O.W camps.

The thing is, being behind enemy lines, it's a bit dangerous. In fact, it's so dangerous that if you so much as make even a tiny movement error, a dirty great Polaris zaps out of the sea and BANG, you're potted meat.

The front end contains a jerky scrolling message, and an awful tune that gets a hell of a lot worse, is played constantly. Yes, it's written on one of those Yamaha thingy-doo-dahs, and, unless you have one, it soon deteriorates into a few clicks, with the odd buzz. Best thing to do is to turn the sound down.

You have to fly your smartly drawn Sea King over the blocky islands, avoiding the enemy planes and missiles, to collect the survivors, who stand and wave at you.

The screen does scroll quite smoothly, and the 'copter sound effect is quite neat, but this doesn't make up for the fact that Sea King is so excrusiatingly hard, that you have to be a masochist to play it more than a few times. Sorry, Players, Hot this ain't. Give it a

Oh no, on sigh, oh alas, oh alack! . . . What a waste of a good idea. Fire Hawk, from Players, is a scrolling shoot 'em up, marred only by the bad ship control.

If it wasn't for this. I might have made it a C+VG hit. As it is, it goes down as competent.

You have to fly your Fire Hawk fighter ship through the vast ZEUS defence installation to . . . well, it says on the inlay card "to survive". Hmm, well, it does make a change.

The screen background scrolls beneath your ship, rather like Uridium, while all the usual sorts of mindless aliens bumble towards you, and you as usual, take potshots at them with your laser cannon.

What bugs me about this game, though, is the lack of control you have over your spaceship. To clarify, once you move, you don't stop moving, and so it's pretty hard to line an alien up in your sights if you are always stiding about like a lump of cold custand on glass. Your ship also appears to have been equipped with a fuel tank the size of a Martini bottle, because it runs low very often, and you have to go through the nasty business of swooping low over the ZEUS installation, and grabbing some more gas.

The fitle screen music sounds more Arabian than anything else (?!), but then again, it doesn't really sound like anything, but it is quite atmospheric, especially if you ram iced Iollies in your ears.

Fire Hawk is the MSX budget

answer to Uridium, and although it's not technically brilliant, it is very addictive, and pretty challenging with it. Take a look at Fire Hawk—you won't be disappointed.

The year is 2087, and the world has been devastated by nuclear war..." Those are the opening lines to Survivors, the new cheapo game from Atlantis.

Don't worry, though, there are a thousand survivors, in hibernation in a huge underground dome, and you must guide three droids through the dome to rescue

This game leans heavily on Boulderdash for inspiration, and it doesn't quite come off. You see, these droids are specialised: one can tunnel through the earth, one can shift boulders, and one can teleport the hibernating survivors to safety.

Sounds great, but when you discover that the earth mover can easily get trapped with all the falling boulders, and that the bouldershifter is almost no use at all, then things start to go to pieces

It could be a reasonable game, I suppose, if you have the patience of a schzoid hamster, but I haven't.

Give this one a miss, it's pretty naff all round.

MACHINES: COMMODORE 64. SPECTRUM, AMSTRAD SUPPLIER: OCEAN VERSION REVIEWED: COMMODORE PRICE: £7.95 SPECTRUM, £8.95. COMMODORE/AMSTRAD REVIEWER: BRIAN

Well, I was completely and utterly addicted to the arcade version of this, and so when I saw the advertisement for Mario Bros a few months ago, I couldn't wait for it to arrive. Well it has, and I must say I was rather disappointed by it. Don't get me wrong, it is about as close to the original as is possible with the limitations of the machine, but for some inexplicable reason, it just doesn't seem to have the same 'grab-you-by-the-throat' compulsiveness of the arcade original.

Anyway, putting that aside for the moment, here's the plot. Bonjourno. My name issa

Mario, And dis is ma brother, Luigi. We work in a disk factory, which has a very slippy floors, and issa inhabited by lotsa nasty creatures. We also have a very hard heads, which we can use to bend da Platforms, and knock thesea rotten animals onto their backs, where we can boot them to kingdom

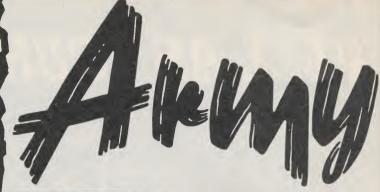

Right, you can now read in English. All the features of the original are there, sidestepper, shellcreeper, etc, as is the two player mode, either working together as a team, or against each other. The graphics are fairly close copies of the original, as is the sound, which is why I cannot understand why this isn't half as much fun as the arcade version. For some reason, the comic style humour isn't there any more, which is probably why some of the magic has been lost.

Overall, it's not a bad game, and it could just be that I was expecting too much of Ocean to capture the spirit of the game I was so addicted to in the arcades. Try before you buy is the rule with this one I'm afraid. It is good, but you might just be a little bit dissapointed.

REVIEWER: CBM 64 (BRIAN)/ SPECTRUM (PAUL)

Right, lads, chest out, stomach in, you're in the army now. The going's gonna get rough and tough. Only the fit will survive a battle with Army Moves. C+VG has deployed its resources in force to battle it out with Dinamic Software's game for Imagine.

Brian "Take No Prisoners"
Webber became involved with fierce fighting which lasted days on the Commodore 64. Paul "Shoot to kill" Boughton launched a full frontal assault on the Spectrum version.

Here's Brian's report from the war zone.

WOW! This is great! Army Moves is the one game I've played every single day, for at least an hour, since the copy arrived on my desk. The game is split into seven sections, and comes in two loads, the second, I assume, is after level four because I haven't got passed that vet!

You are a member of the Special Operations Corp, which has been picked to go into the enemy's camp, to retrieve some vital information, that could turn the coflict around. To get there you must negotiate many hazards, such as crossing jungles and deserts.

The first, four sections are basically scrolling shoot 'em ups, in the same vein as Moon Buggy except that you drive jeeps and helicopters. Level five onwards is then on foot, trying to get the plans, and get back to the barracks.

That is basically it. A fairly run of the mill storyline, and in some respects, a fairly run of the mill game, but for some inexplicable reason, I am totally addicted to this. Yes readers, me, the one who hates this type of shoot 'em up.

The graphics, which although are not mega brilliant, do their job well, and from what I've seen of them are well above

Soundwise, again, this is above average, with a brilliant rendition of 'Colonel Bogey' that would put the original Montry Mole game to shame. For the first few games it might tend to be off putting, but I found I couldn't play without it. When you've completed the first section, you are given a code to enter, that allows you to load the next part. So send your codes to IDEAS Central at the usual address.

Overall, this has to be about the best piece of software I've used in months, and at the price it's a steal. Miss it at your fighting facts.

Brian's filled you all in about the plot of Army Moves so I won't bother. The Spectrum version seems pretty much the same.

The graphics are pretty naff but that doesn't really matter. Army Moves is strangely playable.

It's hellishly difficult to get going. Your jeep approaches a whole in the bridge which it must leap. You can slow the vehicle down but you can't stop it. Just when you're faced with no choice but to jump the gap or plunge into oblivion, you see an enemy jeep heading towards you, or helicopters heading down to zap you.

Army Moves is nothing if not annoyingly addictive. I kept saying "I'll give it one more go." You know how it is? Thirty goes later you're still willing to give it a go.

MACHINES: SPECTRUM/CBM 64/AMSTRAD/MSX SUPPLIER: MASTERTRONIC PRICE: £2.99 REVIEWER: PAUL

This review originally consisted of just four words: "Go and buy Stormbringer." That's all there is to it really. But a large expanse of white space looks a bit odd.

Stormbringer is the final game in David Jones' wonderful series of Magic Knight games. Remember Spellbound and Knight Tyme?
At the end of Knight Tyme Magic Knight had encountered

a problem or two with an unreliable time machine while trying to get back to his own

He was split into two people. Now there's Magic Knight and the Off-White Knight, or as he is also known, Stormbringer.

Stormbringer is the opposite of good. That means he's bad. Very bad. He gets his name from the very powerful storm cloud he can conjour up and with which he intends to destroy the good guy. You can't destroy Stormbringer because that would mean you would destroy yourself. Clever, eh? What you have to do is merge with him.

Once again David has used what he calls Windimation as a means of giving the player command choices. That means a series of windows open on the screen, each with its own information, commands etc. It's the same system he used in the other two games to great effect.

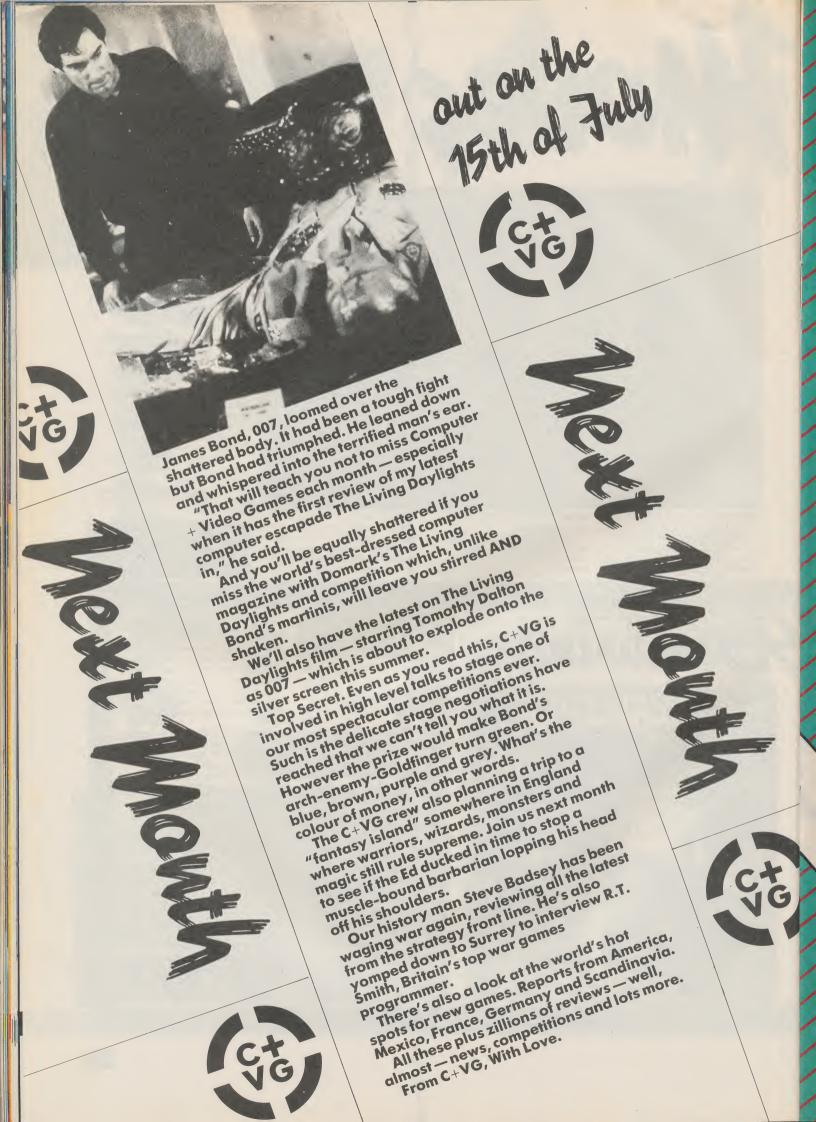

Magic Knight is controlled by joystick as usual. He moves back and forth against a series of backgrounds (great graphics). Picking up objects talking to characters and avoiding this annoying little cloud which zaps a harmful lightning bolt at you.

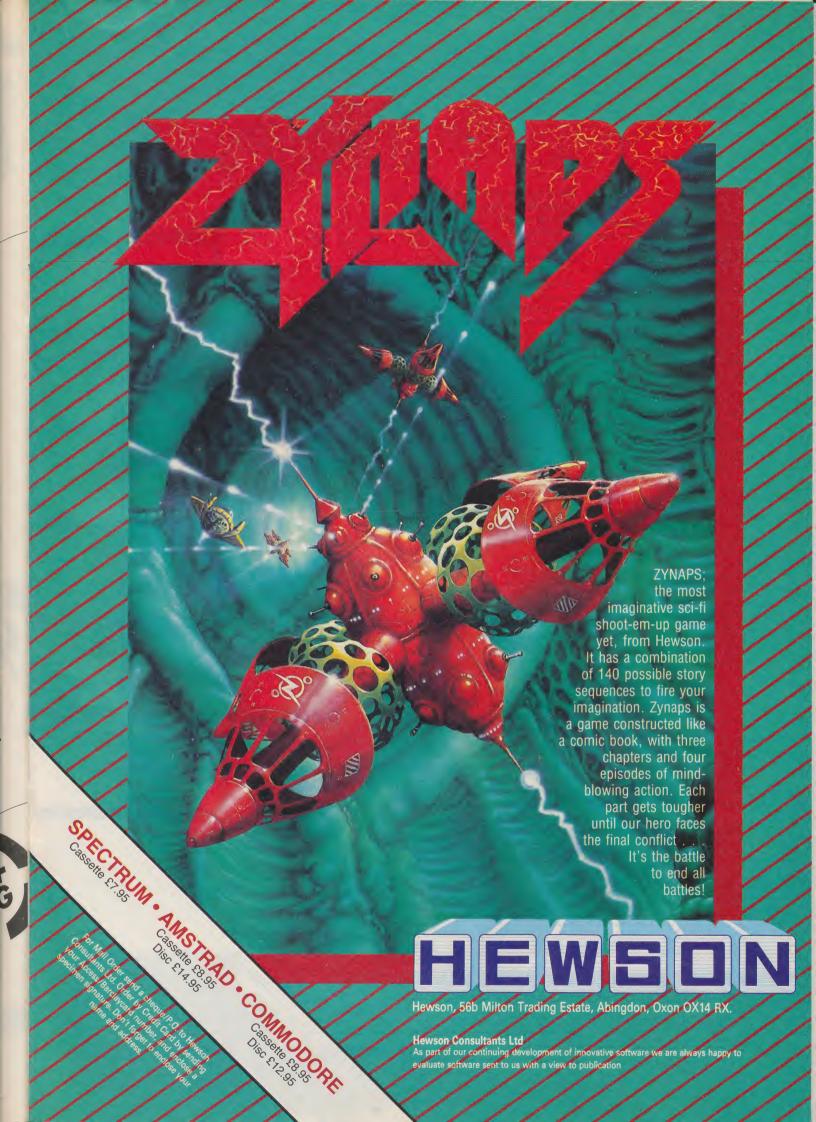

There are 56 locations to explore on the 48K version and 64 on the 128K version.

If you played any of the previous games you'll need no urging to go and buy Stormbringer. It's got great graphics, sound, fiendish problems and great game play. And at £2.99 you can afford not to miss out. This is how all budget games should be.

PLAYABILITY

wsome comic character. Brilliant game. And now the totally essential players guide. C+VG Game of the Month, Nemesis the Warlock, gets the IDEAS Central treatment thanks to programmers Dave Dew and Steve Boynton. Read this and you're on the way to bringing about the death of Torquemada.

BACKGROUND STORY

Nemesis the Warlock leads the resistance movement against Torquemada, Grand Master of the Terminators. Nemesis has sworn to destroy the evil empire of Termight which Torquemada has cleansed of all those he calls aliens. Torquemada is recognised as the protector of human life on the planet and sees the extinction of all "aliens" as a religous crusade. Once Termight has been cleansed, old Torq sets his sights on the rest of galaxy — and only Nemesis can save the aliens.

sets out to find Torquemada and destoy him — but hoardes of terminators are out to stop him dead!

Each screen is packed with hazards — and Terminators. Nemesis has his trusty sword Excessus and a lethal laser pistol. Ammo for the gun can be collected on each screen. If all else fails, Nemesis has the ability to spit acid twice per screen.

NEMESIS — THE FIRST SIX SCREENS GENERAL HINTS

 Remember that as Nomesis stands below a platform his head protudes over the top. So Terminators walking above him will drain his lifeforce as surely as if you allow them to walk into him. Duck if there's a Terminator above. Jump if you're on a higher platform if nasty walks below.

- Edges of the screen are usually safe places to wait for the Terminators to come to you. But watch out for those sneaky little chaps who jump from higher platforms onto your head.
- O Avoid killing Terminators near ammo as the body more often than not will land on it and prevent Nemesis picking it up.
- Terminators cannot be shot at close range so don't waste ammo attempting to kill him with a gun. Run them through with your sword and you'll lose less life force.
- Avoid zombies at all costs. Remember they take four shots to kill.
- Only use acid on Zombies, or if you are close to death. You get a maximum of two acid spits per screen.
- Always keep a check on the number of Terminators left to shoot on each screen — the number on the bottom left hand side of the screen. When you have five or six left to shoot move towards the exit — marked on the map — in order to avoid having to rush when the number reaches zero.

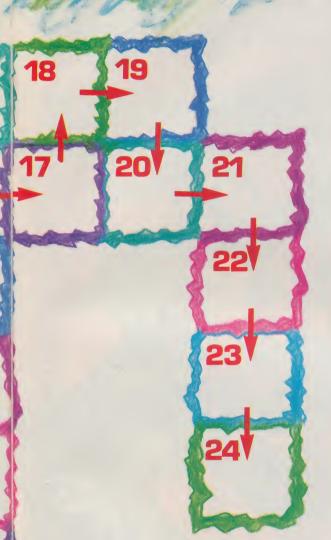

THE WARLOCK

SCREEN GEMS!

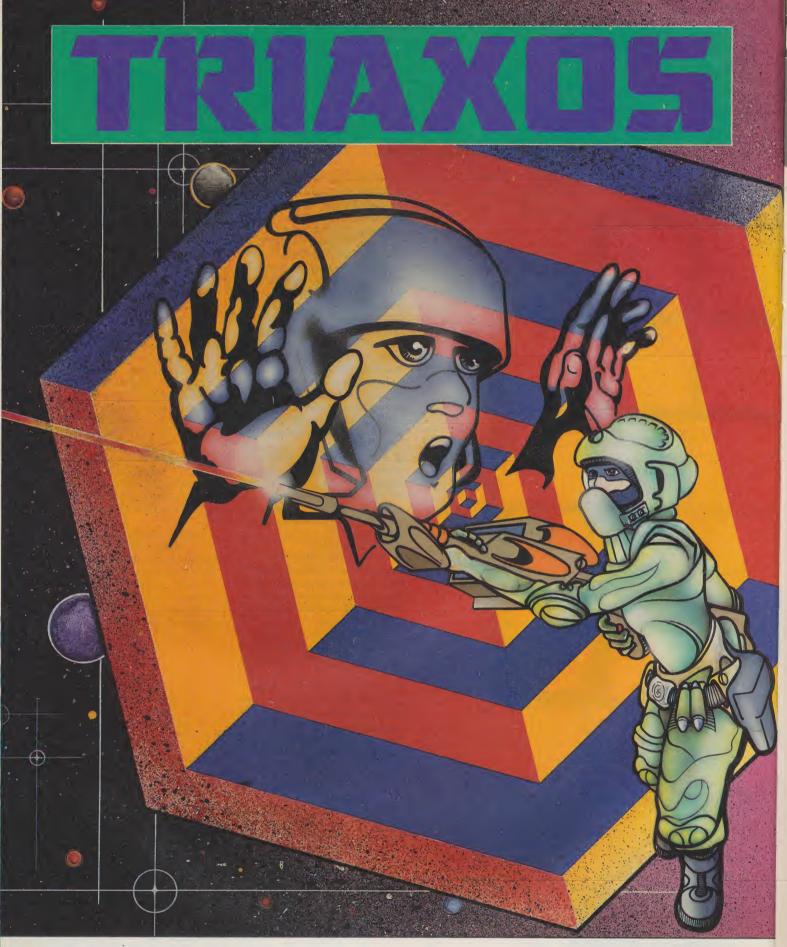

- Screen Four: Put a body on the middle platform to reach it.
- Screen Six: The way out is down. Shoot enough Terminators BEFORE falling down into the pit.
- O Screen Seven: This one takes a while to complete. Fall down the gap and go left or right before you land. Shoot Terminators as they fall through the gap. It is possible to build a bridge of bodies in order to reach the ammo.
- Screen Nine: Build a pile of bodies on the right hand side of the screen so you can climb to the exit, top right.
- O Screen Eleven: Shoot Terminators in the back — forget chivalry, these guys are monsters! as they will fall on the platform creating yet another bridge for Nemesis to climb to the top.
- O Screen Thirteen:
 Unlucky for Terminators!
 Pile bodies up on the left hand side of screen and walk over them to exit top left.
- Screen Eighteen: Jump through the screen exit on the right to land safely on the next screen.
- O You can read the latest adventures of Nemesis every week in 2000AD, and catch up on old adventures in the collected works of Nemesis published by Titan Books.

TRIAXOS – The ultimate in high security orbital prisons holds the only man capable of activating the most powerful weapon in the galaxy.

YOUR MISSION – To use a combination of cunning and brutal aggression, to bring the prisoner out alive.

TIME SCALE – You only have 30 minutes to find him and return him to your ship. However, a specialist mind-probe is in transit to extract the information and will be landing in the next 10 minutes.

Wayne here again, this issue I am not only bringing you the latest in P.B.M. news and reviews, but I'm also going to ask for your help.

t is with many regrets that I have to inform you that Jade Games' computer moderated, fantasy wargame Arcadia has been closed down. The reason? K.J.C. Games claim that Arcadia is basically the same game as their Earthwood, so much so that it infringes K.J.C.'s copyright. Legal steps were taken by K.J.C. to stop Jade running Arcadia and the game has now been closed.

Let this serve as a warning to all C+VG readers who are thinking of starting up their own PBM game. If your idea is not unique, think twice about launching it. You could find yourself in big trouble

On a brighter note, I can confirm that Jade has quickly released another computer moderated PBM, this time it is sci-fi based and is called Shattered Worlds (Mini-review in June C+VG).

All ex-Arcadia players have been offered their money back or a starting position plus full credit in the new game. I can recommend Shattered Worlds and would advise all ex-Arcadians to give it a go.

• Gameplan, the computer moderated American football PBM run by Sloth Enterprises, has now finished its playtest stage and has been officially launched. To date, I've yet to win a game against the computer, however now the playtest has finished all future opponents will be human, so all in all things should be easier (fingers crossed!). Overall the game looks fun and I can tell you that all American football fans will love it.

writes into the mag about PBM, to enquire about PBM in general or to take up one of my offers, will be sent full details of a random PBM game. I am passing the names of all correspondents on to certain PBM companies, who will, free of charge, send you details of their games. Please note, if you don't want to receive the details state so in their letter.

 I get asked to review or playtest many different PBM games each week, but I have to turn a lot of them down or put them on hold, as I play about 15 games already and I just can't cope with any more! Therefore, I'm asking YOU to review the games for me

You will play the game, 90% of the time for nothing, and it will be your job to do all you can to stretch the game to its limits, trying to find faults or sticky patches in the games.

You will also have to write into me once a month and let me know what you think of the game overall and tell me what you have or haven't done in the confines of the

The games can be anything from single character fantasy games to computerised mass wargames. There are even sports orientated

So how do you get a reviewing position? Simply write to me, care of C+VG, and tell me what type of game you would like to review and why I should choose YOU to review it.

Then, once a month I will select the people who have convinced me that they should review a game and set them up as a playtester. I don't intend to keep a waiting list, so it will be up to you to write in each month if you are not selected first time.

Review: Aegyptus.

• Aegyptus is a computer moderated tribal PBM run by N.A.B. Software. It is based in ancient times on a society which is not too different from the ancient Egypt we have all read and seen films about.

The play of the game is governed by a yearly cycle with six moves a year. Each move represents two months of the year. Certain actions like farming, herding and collecting taxes may only be performed in certain months.

You play the leader of a tribe of people with two main aims - to survive economic hardship and grasp political power.

Your tribe may be any one of seven political types: Herding Tribe, Nomadic Clan, Nomadic Nation, Farming Tribe, City State, Republic or Empire.

A player starts the game as a ● For a limited period anyone who herding tribe and — if they wish progress up the hierarhy of political organisations. Your political organisation affects how many people you control, what they may be, troop types allowed and how much territory you can control.

You create your tribe by selecting up to three types of craft workers and four types of animal. This part of the game is crucial and you should put a great deal of time and effort into considering who to pick as your workers, as it could prove disasterous if you got the wrong combination of the workers and animals.

Depending on the number and type of craft workers you have created, you then decide on the numbers of troops, slaves, weapons and armour you are

Once you have sent this info off, you then receive your order sheet and it is up to you to try and become top player in the tribes in your category. You do this by issuing various computer orders on your order sheet. Some examples of orders are: Build: This order can be used to construct roads, bridges and irrigation, dependent on your supplies and money. Go: This order is used to move your tribe or an expedition force. You can head in either any of the four major points of the compass and you also get the option to cross or follow seas and rivers, as well as move in an aggressive mode. Pursue: You may wish to chase an army controlled by another player. By issuing this order your troops will chase after another army until they have caught up with them or cannot pursue them any longer due to various reasons, like fatigue or impassable terrain for example.

The combat system is very realistic. You don't get any of the usual "You run into an army so you engage them in battle" here!! A battle may only result when forces belonging to different players end in the same square and each player has indicated the desire to fight.

Players will be told if and who they are fighting. If involved in a battle vou will be sent a battle set-up form to complete and submit with your next turn. This is treated as the first action of your next orders.

This means, that like real war, you plan the coming action without knowing the result of the battle. When you enter a battle situation you have quite a few orders to choose from, which include retreating before the battle to all out pursuit.

Your troops can be anything from the common Velite or Archer to the tactical and well equipped Legionaire.

The main reason why the combat system is so realistic is because fighting battles only occurs when you've declared a tribe your enemy and NOT just when you run into them.

There is a system in the game that gives you the chance to declare whether the tribe you have run into is either an offensive ally, defensive ally, Neutral or enemy. You must negotiate with each player to decide which is which.

All players are deemed neutral to each other at the start of the game, until specified otherwise.

Aegyptus is not an open ended game. When a certain number of settlements are reached and controlled the game will end and the winners will be announced.

One winner will be judged for each level of political organisation. Victory is judged on various factors, the size and quality of armies, economic assets and holdings, to name but a few.

Wayne's verdict

N.A.B. Software has taken a brave gamble importing Ageyptus in from the USA, where it is a smash hit PBM game. They have been running quality PBM's in the UK since 1985 and Ageyptus is their biggest commercial release to date. Each game can accommodate up to 150 players and the world is mapped over 100 by 100 squares.

There are other points of the game that I haven't the space to comment upon in depth, but you can get involved in naval combat, encounter sea monsters, harvest food, mine, create weapons and lumber forest.

The game is undoubtedly a good one, it oozes quality and style. It presents a comprehensive portrait of ancient times.

The rule book, which is well produced and nicely set takes you through the game step by step. I also like the concept of this game. It is a social/economic/financial strategy based game, with the warfare option included if you need it.

It is not a "hack and slash" basic wargame. A lot of time, effort and pre-planning has to go into issuing your orders. You also have to contact a lot of other players to ensure that you enjoy the game to

I would not recommend this game to a novice or beginner as they would find it too difficult. However, if you have played a few PBMs and are looking for a new challenge, then give it a try. It is easy to lead an army into battle, but could you ensure that battle gives you the foundations of an empire? Ageyptus gives you that chance to find out.

The price for the rule book and set up package in Ageyptus is £7 however the prices for playing vary according to the political power you play. They are, per set of orders: Herding Tribe, £2.00, Farming Tribe £2.50, Nomadic Clan £2.75, City State, £3.00, Nomadic Nation, £3.00, Republic, £3.50, Empire, £4.00.

- You should compete with only the players who have chosen the same political structure as you.
- Don't antagonise players with different aims: it is a waste of valuable resources.
- Fight battles when you need too and not because you want to. If you go around fighting all the time you won't last very long!!
- Keep in mind that although each turn represents two months real time, it is possible to make a scientific breakthrough which will in game turns bring your nations historical development up by tens or even hundreds of years.
- Contact other players and form alliances. This will help you survive longer in the game.

Wayne's Wonder Offer

If you write to me and enclose the picture of me at the top of the page you will be able to set up for half price and get a FREE turn! Send in your cheques or postal orders for £3.50, made payable to N.A.B. Software, and I will pass them on. This offer only stands for this month — so get cracking.

• I have also been inundated with letters from players all over the world who have complained that my system of allowing the first ten players who write in to win a prize is unfair on players who live abroad, as they receive their copies of C+VG later than all the British readers and also the post takes a longer period of time to get to Priory Court if sent from abroad.

Well the foreign readers will be relieved to know that I agree with them, and from this issue onwards the people who win prizes in my competitions will be the first ten people drawn out of the hat when all the entries have been received. O.K.?

 Brian Stewart of Bethnal Green, London writes in and asks what sort of things PBM games cover. Well Brian, you can play almost anything by mail!!

Financial/strategy/economic games: Here you have to try and either run a country or a nation by either warfare or economic means. You have to make your nation produce certain goods and items as well as keep the workers happy which I have already covered in other issues, there are also the following types of games:

Sporting games: I know of postal games for American Football, Soccer, Cricket and, believe it or not Boxing!!

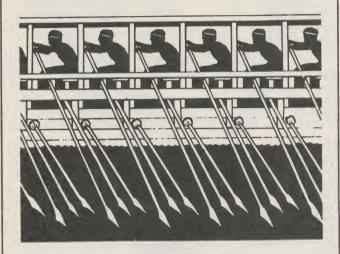

by paying their wages and feeding

World Domination Games: These games are usually set in the present or slightly in the future and you play a country and the idea is to be the first player to build a nuke and drop it on your neighbout! Economics play an important part, but so does your convetional forces and the other player alliances that you build within the confines of the game.

Unusual games: I know of an attempt to postalise a Colditz based game, where you have to escape from a German P.O.W. camp, an up and running Napolionic postal wargame based on Waterloo, a superhero's postal game, where you can play the equivilent of Batman or Wonder Woman, a PBM where you play a bootlegger in the prohibition era of America and I even know a game where you can play a character out of the sixteenth century and try and alter the future of the nation.

Welcome to the first ever reader interactive magazine page! Not only can you READ the incredibly interesting Douglas Adams interview but you can also USE the pictures to create an awesome work of art that will amaze and entertain you and your friends.

So get your sissors and

So get your sissors and glue together and prepare to construct the C+VG Douglas Adams flip book! Around the borders of these pages you'll find lots of numbered pictures of the creator of Hitch-Hiker.

What you have to do is cut them all out, stick each one on a separate piece of thin card. Once you've done that, put all the individual pictures into numbered order and staple the bottom of the frames together.

Then you've got your flip book — and you'll have hours of fun watching Douglas Adams drink tea while simply flipping the frames. Simple huh?

Thanks to Marshall M. Rosenthal for the pictures and the use of his nifty Gen-Lock device which made it all possible.

DON'T PANIS!

THE name DOUGLAS ADAMS should ring a few bells. If it doesn't, try The Hitch-Hiker's Guide to the Galaxy. The original book spawned a radio series, which in turn became a TV show, an adventure game and it's soon to be a full-length movie. Mr Adams has been working with Infocom in between cups of tea and here our inter-galactic correspondent MARSHAL M.
ROSENTHAL catches up with him to bring you a run-down on BUREAUCRACY. Guaranteed free of red tape...

ust about everyone you meet has heard of The Hitch-Hiker's Guide and the other books that make up the Hitch-Hiker trilogy. But did you know that Douglas Adams also spent time writing Doctor Who scripts - a golden period this, with Adams writing and Tom Baker playing the ultimate Doctor — or that he was involved with Lucasfilm's Games Division during the development of Labyrinth, the David Bowie movie spin-off.

Hitch-Hiker's Guide has already been transformed into a game — but Bureaucracy is Adams' first purpose-written adventure. So you want to know more?

Why not just invite him over, put down some biscuits and tea, and ask?

Unfortunately, Adams doesn't seem to be the kind of party animal you can entice with such goodies.

So a phone call is made, and a clever plan is put into effect. Members of C+VG's Stealth Division disguise themselves as Douglas Adams, and hide inside the mirrors of his hidden London flat.

Then, whilst Adams innocently checks his appearance and runs a finger through his hair—WHAM—he becomes the contents of an airmail package heading for New York City.

By the way, it's not easy getting a dude who's 6'5" tall bundled up inside of a crate marked TEA—THIS END UP!

You'd expect the creator of Arthur Dent to be kind of a little guy robed in polyester, not the size of Mount Everest.

But now he's at our mercy, and must answer all our questions, just like Arthur and Ford Prefect in the Vogon spaceship. We begin the interrogation . . . C+VG: Douglas Adams didn't just spring to life with the Vogons and Earth's destruction. What type of things were you doing before Hitch-Hiker's Guide to the Galaxy?

D.A.: That's a timely question, because somebody found for me vesterday found for me yesterday (actually last year) two short stories which I had done when I was 12. They were published in a comic called The Eagle, which I used to read as a kid. I was even paid some ten shillings for each story. Much later, I was in the Footlights Club at Cambridge, and just missed (by 10 and 15 years respectively) John Cleese and Dudley Moore. But I did get a bit involved with Monty Python near the end of the series and a few bits of mine did make it on the air. C+VG: Did you work with any of the Python guys? D.A.: Graham Chapman and I did a pilot for a comedy featuring Ringo Starr, but it never got anywhere. I also helped Graham write some of his autobiography, but mostly I watched him drink a lot of gin.

a lot of gin. C+VG: But you did get involved with BBC television, didn't you? D.A.: Right. It was the 1978 season of Doctor Who, with Tom Baker as the Doctor. I did a number of scripts, like Pirate Planet and The City of Death. I was also the script editor the following year, and ghost-wrote a few more episodes. Doctor Who was a lot of fun. I mean, it wasn't super high budget by any means. Rocks would vibrate like jelly — there was just so much you could do with limited resources. Also, there was such a highshooting schedule that you ended up running as fast as you could just to stay behind. I think that the old black and white episodes worked better because the lighting was so much more interesting. Colour is a lot more destructive than an asset in sci-fi, because television lighting for colour makes everything too bright and baldly realistic. C+VG: Where do most of your ideas come from?

D.A.: Hitch-Hiker's was really my first major thing, so a lifetime of ideas hanging around in the back of my mind wanted out real bad.
It's a matter of being open-minded, of knowing what you want to do. At the time, I wanted to write a science-fiction comedy. Some things happen to you that are perfect to add to paper as well.

C+VG: So the famous, or infamous, towel liturgy comes from real life? D.A.: Yes indeed. I was vacationing with friends in Greece some years back. Every morning they'd have to sit around and wait for me because I couldn't find my blessed towel. It seemed to epitomise my disorganised state of being. I came to feel that someone really together, one who was well organised, would always know where his towel was. I thought of it as a Universal Truth. C+VG: Did you map out problems Arthur would get into beforehand? D.A.: Not at all. Writing has to take the writer, as well as the reader, by surprise When I had Arthur and Ford jettisoned into space, wellthat seemed to be the end of it all right there. I racked my brains trying to find a way to rescue them without "with one bound, Jack was free" entering all. Then I remembered a TV show on Judo I had seen. A small man can toss a heavier opponent because he's using the other's weight against him. So here I was with the problem that any solution I used would be highly improbable. So, make improbability the solution, and it leads you on into other things. Thus creating the Infinite Improbability Drive. C+VG: What did you enjoy most in writing the Hitch-Hiker books?

D.A.: Being able to bring together the meeting between the utterly ordinary and mundane, and the utterly extraordinary. C+VG: Are you going to continue the trilogy? D.A.: No, absolutely not. I've a new book coming out, Dirk Gently's Holistic Detection Agency. Now all those chat show hosts will have to come up with some new questions. C+VG: Speaking of new works, will we have better new interactive text game, Bureaucracy.

Stephen King is the world's top horror writer. In his latest book, Eyes of the Dragon, King has turned his hand to fantasy with instant success. John Gilbert, whose own horror novel, The Devil's Children, is due to be published late next year, looks at King's career and his future plans.

Stephen King, undoubtedly the world's greatest living horror writer, is about to make history.

Within the next 14 months he will publish four novels, none of them straight horror, continuing on the incredible path which is taking him away from the gore field and into other areas where critics and new readers are finding that there's more to Stephen King than boogeymen in the closet and giant, goblin-fronted trucks which mow down their hapless drivers.

King, who celebrates his 40th birthday in September, has the loping stance of a bear furthered by a prolific beard, which he cultivates during winter, but countered with kindly disposition and the humour.

He's already published 15 novels under his own name, had films made of eight of those, as well as having his novella The Mist turned into an American radio play and home computer game.

He admits that, although more than 200 million copies of his books have been sold worldwide, he would have taken longer to get his first novel published if it hadn't been for his wife, Tabitha, who is also a novelist with a high profile in the US.

In 1972 he started work on short story about a girl with the psychic power to move objects. At that time he was living in a mobile home in Hampden, which is in Maine, New England, and working as a part-time teacher.

He worked himself into depression and began to believe that he'd never make it as a writer — despite the piles of short stories, some of which he'd published, and four novels he had written.

Carrie, half completed, went into the bin but Tabby rescued and read it. She convinced him to complete the manuscript, which grew into a short novel, and submit it to US hardback publisher Doubleday.

It was accepted and King received a royalty of $2,500. He was happy but almost had a seizure when Doubleday announced that the paperback rights had gone to New American Library for a staggering $400,000. King bought his wife a present to celebrate, a hairdryer, and gave up teaching to write full-time.

OUT OF THE CLOSET

When Carrie was published King had no intentions of becoming a horror writer. There's a maxim in the writing business that genre books — science fiction, romance and horror — usually sell between 3,000 to 100,000 copies, while mainstream fiction, which contains a little of everything to interest everybody, can sell up to a million copies or more.

King, like other authors, writes about what interests him, but as new novels were published — 'Salem's Lot and The Shining — it became evident, even to his agent, that he was bringing horror out of the closet and making it his own. He swiftly became worried he would be stuck with the genre curse but the critics who were willing to read past the first page of his novels, as well as his fans, saw a depth of character and narrative in his work.

How do you follow the rampant success of a book — not to forget Brian de Palma's film — like Carrie?

In 1974 King played around with the idea that a small town, lost amongst the New England countryside, could become prey to a vampire. The townsfolk could just disappear and, like the Marie Celeste, no one would know why. King's agent wasn't enamoured with the idea because it was another horror novel but he started the novel, called Second Coming, which when published was retitled 'Salem's Lot.

When 'Salem's Lot was published King was already working on his next novel, a book about the Patty Hearst kidnapping called The House on Value Street which eventually went on to become called The Stand. His plans underwent a dramatic change when he stayed at a rambling hotel, called The Stanley's in a little out of the way place called Estes Park. It was about to shut up after a frantic summer season and everybody was leaving, the hotel was nearly deserted.

The Value Street novel changed course, and a new novel sprang up, its central character a boy with the ability to "shine", a power to see future events, trapped with a psychotic father and ineffective mother in a snow-bound, haunted hotel. King named the novel The Shine.

INTO THE FIRE . .

The movie rights to The Shine went before the book was published. Warner Brothers wanted Stanley — 2001 — Kubrick to direct with Jack — Prizzi's Honour — Nicholson in the starring role as the failed teacher and drunken, homicidal, father. Everything seemed fine, but Warner's wanted to change the title.

He has already escaped attempts to change the title of the TV mini series based on 'Salem's Lot to As Maine Goes, So Goes The Nation, but he understood the reasoning

One of the major characters in the book is a black chef called O'Halloran. The film company was worried because Shine was a pre-war racial taunt dating back to when black shoe-shine boys worked the streets of

US capital cities. So, the title of book and film became The Shining. During the year in which The Shining was published a new author crept into the public eye. Richard Bachman's first novel, called Rage, drew little attention from the crities and modest paperback sales. It concerns a college student who wants revenge on life, the universe and the educational system and goes to fatal lengths Bachman's books — of which five are still in print — received little publicity but the author made a slip when he published a slim novel called Thinner, about a lawyer under a gypsy slimming curse. It received a lot of publicity, it was Richard Bachman's greatest novel yet, and it was his downfall. His publisher, New American Library, announced that he had died of cancer. Shortly after Stephen King, under constant pressure from fans, admitted that Richard Bachman was his pseudonym.

He had adopted the pen name in order to get away from Stephen King who then was expected to write a certain kind of fiction but, despite the lack of horror in four of the books, most of them made the US best seller lists as soon as Stephen King's name was put on the covers.

LET'S BOOGY MAN

While Bachman boiled away King got on with the business of being Mr Best Seller under his own name with a string of books including The Dead Zone, Cujo and two short story collections.

He also wrote two massive novels, The Stand and IT, and collaborated with Ghost Story author Peter Straub on a fantasy called The Talisman.

The Stand, a sombre and sometimes brutal tale of Armageddon not by nuclear holocaust but by a flu virus called Captain Trips, was the first to see publication.

The original manuscript was cut substantially by the publishers but an uncut version, around 1,000 pages will be published now that some copyright problems have been sorted out with Doubleday, King's first US publisher. The same lengthy problem has been encountered by movie maker George Romero, a close friend of King's who wants to make The Stand into a film.

Several writers have produced long screen plays and even King's attempt would take up a marathon seven hours of film time. Still, author and film maker are still committed to the project so we're likely to see cinematic version of the film before the end of the decade.

The Talisman, written by King and Straub, is slightly longer than The Stand.

It centres on a boy's search, in this and a parallel world, for a talisman which will cure his mother of cancer and save the queen of the territories, the other world, from death

Straub visited King at his mansion in Maine to plan the book. They had come to know each other when King started to write front-cover critiques for Straub's books and both authors realised they used a similar approach, if not style, in their way of seeing the world.

They split the book into chunks. Each wrote a separate section on their word processors. There was no need to meet and discuss each others parts of the manuscript all they had to do was use a modem and send text from one computer to the other over the telephone lines.

King had discovered the new technology on which all his novels are now written. It helps him to churn out at least 1,000 words almost every day of the year.

SUMMER HOLIDAY

King is, figuratively speaking, in the summer of his life and has decided to give his fans a rest. He's worried that they'll get Kingorrhea from the mountains of work he's putting out.

The publication of new books will stop for a few years, but Tabby suggested that he clear his shelves of the titles he has not published and that's why four new King novels will see the light of print before the end of 1987.

The first, Eyes Of The Dragon — originally titled The Napkins — has just been released. It's a fairy tale, written for his daughter Naomi who — unlike his sons Joe and Owen — hates horror, but includes the same cruel satire that makes King's novels a world, or two, apart from other horror/fantasy works.

Characters include a goodly king who burps and farts his way through dinner before throwing up into the fire in the privacy of his own rooms, and a randy young heir-apparent who's framed for the murder of his father by court magician Flagg, who also appears as the bad guy in The Stand.

Later this year Misery, King's private vision of the terrors of fanatical readers fandom, sees publication. It's about Paul Sheldon, a writer of romances kidnapped by his "number one fan" who forces him to resurrect her favourite heroine, Misery, whom he killed off in the hope that he could start to do some "serious" writing. The book's close to horror — at one point the crazed ex-nurse fan cuts off one of his feet to stop him from escaping — but it's more a dark comedy than all-out gore.

King's first mass-publication foray into science fiction, The Tommyknockers, appears next year. It centres on the old saying "don't touch what you don't understand".

The book starts as a writer unearths a spaceship in his back yard. Nearly everyone who comes into contact with it develops powers which enable them to invent marvellous new inventions but, as with nuclear reactors, there're always snaps waiting around the corner to blow up in your face if you don't fully understand what you've created.

WILD WEST AND MEN IN BLACK

At the time of publication Sphere paperbacks has just picked up the rights to six volumes of King short stores, collectively called The Dark Tower. It weaves through a series of inter-connected short stories about Roland the last gunslinger in a Wild West/Fantasy other world where magic is alive and kicking.

Roland's quest is to find and kill the man in black, a sort of magician and fortune teller. Each short story advances his quest and his progress towards the Dark Tower where his destiny will be known.

Although Sphere plans to publish six of these collections, King says that he has 20 already outlined and hints that there could be more. He also has a number of novels which are unlikely to see print, because of there are some things just too gross to publish. Not least among these no hopers is The Cannibals. To give just a taster it's about a group of people trapped in a towerblock with only themselves for comfort and food

KING OF THE CREEPS

All of King's novels have been optioned by film companies and most of them have found their way into the British cinema without critical success. King's favourite film is Cujo, for which he wrote the screenplay, but, at best he dislikes many of the other productions and at worst loathes them, Stanley Kubrick's The Shining is a case in point.

British audiences will be treated to three King films during this summer as well as Stand By Me, which is on release now. All of them were in production within the past two years but Creep Show II will be released first. It's the sequel to Creep Show, a film made up of several story segments in the form of a comic book with a ghoulish master of ceremonies called The Creep to take viewers between stories.

King wrote the screen play, George Romero directed and King's young son Joe took a cameo role in the film's first and final

All the stories in the sequel have been written by King but George Romero wrote the screen play. It includes The Raft, a short story from Skeleton Crew about a group of teenagers stuck on raft in the middle of a lake and menaced — and eventually killed — by an oil slick monster which floats across the water.

Even the Bachman books are being turned into films. The first, The Running Man, will star Arnold Swarzenegger, fresh from his role in the third Conan film, as in a contestant on the ultimate TV games show where to survive against a team of bloodhungry hit men is to win.

King's greatest film project, but one which he'd probably forget, is Maximum Overdrive. It's the first film he's directed and written. The plot is taken from Trucks a short story in Night Shift in which machinery, in particualr an articulated lorry with a goblin's mask front, comes to life and ensalves humans who have to keep their masters fuelled up.

Maximum Overdrive was heavily cut by US censors. It enjoyed a limited test run in a few US cinemas but critics slammed it when it started its main release. King puts the blame partly on himself and partly on the censors who in the US count the number of swear words, sex scenes and gory incidents to fix a certificate.

In the UK the film may fare better because our board of censors only cut excessive violence, gore and sex if it's the slightest bit unnecessary to a plot, and fix certificates depending on the general tone of a film.

King enjoyed his time as director but doesn't want to do it again for a while. In some respects the reason is the same for not wanting to publish anything new for a few years. He doesn't want to wear out his effect on the public.

That doesn't mean that fiction reviewers, film critics and censors can relax. By his own account he'll be in the public eye, in small doses, until he drops, or until the public grows tired of him. So, they'd better watch out.

Stephen King fans may want to subscribe to his own newspaper, Castle Rock, run by his secretary, Stephanie Leonard. It offers articles about King and related subjects, information about new books, and short stories by him or other authors. More info from Castle rock, PO Box 3183, Bangor, ME 04401.

GOMPETITION GOBOT CHAUENGE

From deep within the vastness of space come the Gobots. Their home is the high-tech, war ravaged planet Gobotron.

Renegade forces commanded by the ruthless Cy-Kill are in constant battle to overthrow the Guardian Gobots and rule the planet.

You've probably already thrilled to the cartoon series of the Gobots. Soon you'll be able to play Reaktor's game The Challenge of the Gobots on Amstrad, Spectrum and Commodore 64.

But while you're waiting don't miss out on our great Gobots competition.

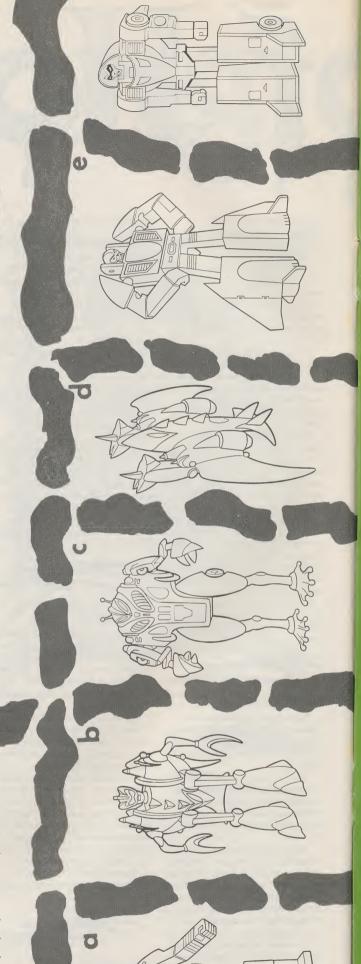

First prize is the whole range of Gobot toys—that's 12 in all (gasp) PLUS a Gobots video Battle of the Rocklands (wow!)

Two runners-up will get a copy of the video (cor!). And that's not all. The next 15 people will get Gobot T-shirts (gosh!).

So how could these goodies be yours? That's easy if you're a keen Gobots fan.

On this page are six Gobot figures. They are Turbo, Scooter, Leader-1, Cy-Kill, Crasher and Copter. But which is which? All you have to do is to identify each Gobot.

Send your answers to Challenge of the Gobots, Computer + Video Games, Priory Court, 30-32 Farringdon Lane, London, EC1R 3AU. The closing date is July 16th and the editor's decision is final. Got it?

 Marvel Comic characters will soon be making a return to the computer screen, but this time Stefan Ufnowski will be writing the script. Adventure Soft plan to release an adventure based on Captain America, in time for release at September's PCW Show.

Hot on the heels of Bureaucracy, two more Infocom titles will be available during June. Lurking Horror is the latest game by Dave Lebling, co-author of the Zork trilogy, as well as other popular titles such as Starcross and Spellbreaker. Steve "Leather Goddesses" Meretsky will also make a welcome return, with a sequel to Planetfall, entitled Station Fall. Meanwhile, with an eye on the competition, no doubt, Infocom are in the process of upgrading their system. Graphics there will not be—yet. "But," explained Dave Lebling, "we will be building in the necessary hooks, so that we can incorporate graphics on the new system at a later stage.

- US Gold announces the release of three new titles from Broderbund. Mindwheel and Essex are joined by a third "Electronic Novel" entitled Brimstone, all retailing at £24.99.
- The final conversion of The Pawn has been released. Text only, it is for the Spectrum 128, including the Spectrum +2 and +3, and priced at £14.95 on cassette.
- The gentle ladies of St.

Brides are coming up with a gruesome murder mystery in Jack the Ripper. fun, and never published. Without the comic touch Glen and Martin, both for which St. Bride's has professional mainframe become famous, Jack the Ripper will be a serious adventure, in which your task is to convince the police that you are not he. Written with Gilsoft's new Professional Adventure Writing System, the adventure will be available during June for Spectrum, with Commodore and Amstrad versions to follow later in the year.

 Fergus McNeill's new company, Abstract Concepts (exclusively forecast in C+VG last year) has set up an office in Southampton, and will produce the more serious type of adventure, leaving the spoofs under the Delta 4 label. The first of these will be The Enchantress, and in a recent deal, all products after this one will be published by Activision.

Judith Childs has left the fold, but Colin Bucket and Jason Somerville remain in Fergus' youthful and successful team.

● The BBC adventure Village Of Lost Soul, released by Magus, never achieved its full market potential, says Robico Software. In a deal with Glen McCauley and Martin Moore, who wrote and programmed the adventure, Robico will rerelease it in a new updated format, restyled to fit in with the current Robico range. The game will be retitled Realm Of Chaos, and two more to make up a trilogy are planned, and the first is already under way.

The adventures will be available for BBC and Electron, with Amstrad and Atari versions planned.

Let's hope Robico will follow this with Glen and Martin's comedy adventures, which were written mainly for programmers from Worthing, have a wicked sense of humour, and have produced a couple of really painfully funny adventures. Having played these in depth 'in my own time' as it were, I can promise a rave review in advance! Take note, Robico!

 I have often played adventures and I think they are real fun. The best thing about them is the way adventuring teases your mind, breaks it into pieces, and squeezes your brains. If you succeed in solving a problem you feel great - a sort of sweet pleasure like when you have passed an exam.

If you find a solution printed in C+VG's pages your fun is spoiled. If one can't beat an problem, leave it for some time (usually half an hour) and then return to tackle it with renewed energy

Change you mind, Keith. We trust you. An adventurer who writes to you asking for a complete solution is not a true Marco Andreoli, Keith's reply: I can see you are a reader of long standing, William! You obviously read the second C+VG yearbook! But the Fiend is NOT one of the staff.

• I just finished reading the February issue of C+VG, and I have a major bone to pick with you concerning your review of Bard's Tale. It's bad enough that it took you guys a year to finally review it, but when you finally did, you gave it such a bad review

When I turned the page and saw the review I thought "Wow, they finally reviewed it!" And then I read the review. I can't put into words the shock, the anger, and the rage! My friends also could not believe your review. The Bard's Tale is the best game I ever played. It has atmosphere, style, class, and some not bad graphics.

I'll go down on my hands and knees if that's what it will take to make you rewrite your review or at least make some type of apology in your magazine to all those fans out there! I can think of twenty people off hand who are assassination. Brent Kyle,

Keith's reply: There is little point in reviewing a game in C+VG until it is released, or about to be released in the UK Brent, even assuming we have a copy! Bard's Tale was obviously released a lot later here than in Canada.

A nice adventure, The Sandman Cometh was written by Mike Turner and his team from Star Dreams, who have had a number of listings printed in C+VG. It's a pity that Sandman didn't take off in the way that it deserved. Still, here at least is one player of the game. Just your lick, Steve, that there seems to be not one single clue for Trantoss in our files!

So who can remedy that, and help Steve in the process?

With recent re-releases Scott Adams adventures are getting a new lease of life in the Helpline mail.

Although in comparison with today's adventures, the text content is miniscule, they are still delighting adventurers with their baffling problems and atmospheric plots.

And they are well remembered by Andrew Bethell, an adventure player and C+VG reader since our first issue back in October

"Despite Scott Adams" games having a total lack of location descriptions and a parser that wouldn't look out of place on a ZX80, there is something so atmospheric about those games . . . Or maybe nostalgic?" muses Andrew.

game, and duly received his Spectrum copy. But after three months of playing it, he has become totally frustrated.
The game arrived with no instructions whatsoever.
There was no game
description, no little booklet of background information, nothing but the prize question.

Heinz wrote to Vonsoft to point out that even the £25,000 prize game Eureka had full playing instructions, and could they send him some, please, for ARENA?

The game, claims Heinz, is almost impossible to play without information on valid commands, abbreviations, SAVE and LOAD instructions etc.

I cannot help, as Vonsoft didn't think fit to send me a review copy. And in EIGHT weeks, Vonsoft have not stirred themselves to reply to Heinz's letter.

Come on Vonsoft — get on with it! Support your customers like any other self-respecting adventure house! I shall be keeping a close eye on ARENA and its prize money.

I like nothing less than a prize game turning into a non-event. Meanwhile let me know if you hear anything relevant, or can help Heinz to play his game.

Hot on the heels of CRL's Murder Off Miami, comes another American detective adventure from Fergus McNeill, this time published by Pirhana. And the two games could hardly be more different. Fergus stresses that this one is a Delta 4 product, whereas Miami wasn't, although what that means in practice is probably only of interest to the taxman!

Regardless of that, it can safely be said that Fergus is back on form, with this parody of the great American Private Eye, or Private Dick, as he is referred to (of course!) in the adventure. Slummy office full of dog ends, containing trendy Private Dick's mac hanging on coatstand, and a rather strange

As you are contemplating your new surroundings, SHE arrives at the office, casts a shapely silhouette on the frosted glass panel of the office door, and kicks it in. Her father has made good to the tune of a million, but has failed to turn up to a celebratory reunion at Joe's She'd waited a fortnight, but no sign of Dad. Is there foul play behind it? Of course you'll take the case.

With no more ado you set off in your old heap of a car. Babies cry, interest rates fluctuate, Clive Sinclair launches a non-standard Maltese Falcon, and you get blown to bits. That'll teach you to examine everything carefully!

Never mind, you DID make a ram save, didn't you? The obvious place to head is Joe's Diner, to pick up the trail. After a little difficulty with a wire mesh, you get your first real lead, amidst the grease and grime of this dubious establishment.

Now it's off again in the car, and behind a pink door you meet Ben, and find another clue. But what about the rendezvous you were supposed to keep? And so on

The Big Sleaze is a Quilled adventure, and in true Fergus style, there is plenty of humorous text.

I found that the jokes stand up better than in anything he has done before, and the narrative suits the subject well. It rather put me in mind of a fictional 'eye' I used to read — Glenn Bowman was his name, Hartley Howard his author.

There are a few graphics, fast and not too boring, and you get the choice of saving to tape, disk, or ram. The game comes in three parts, on cassette.

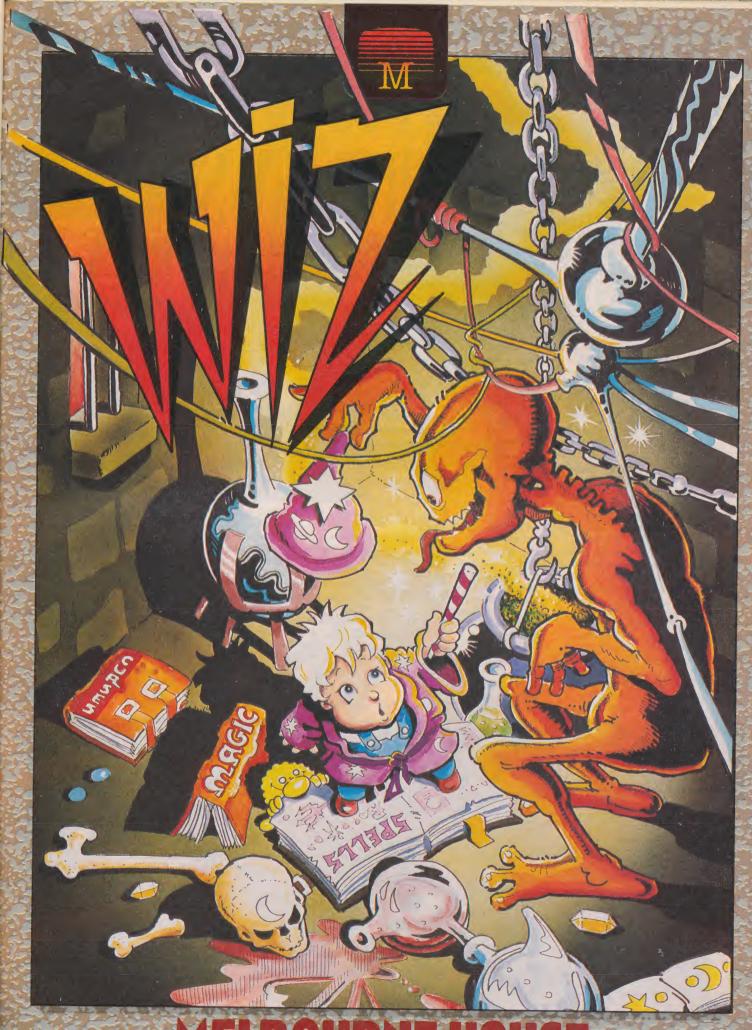

Detective stories are a natural for the adventure format, and adventure players should be well suited to solving them. Every adventurer has (or should have) a keen eye for spotting clues and making deductions — it's all part of the game.

Here is a game that is not too difficult, the vocabulary is less fussy than any other Delta 4 adventure, and I rate it as Fergus' best to date. If you enjoy a bit of sleuthing American style, then do it with a smile on your face, with The Big Sleaze.

Unfortunately, there's a radio connected to my brain.

You could not expect anything other than something completely zany from Douglas Adams, although word is that his original story has been substantially modified in this, the latest Infocom adventure.

It appears you have just moved house and changed jobs. Unfortunately, the removal firm has hit a snag, and been unable to deliver your furniture to the new address - but not to worry you are about to visit Paris for a fortnight. All expenses are paid by The Happitec Corporation, for they are sending you on a training have mailed to your address, and head for the airport. One thing at least, is in your favour listed in your address book is the phone number of Getlost Airport Cab. Now where's that cheque?

Outside, your mailbox has a leaflet in it. It's all about what wonderful graphics adventures in blue boxes have. Yes, Infocom are having a go at Magnetic Scrolls!

Scoring is by increments of a single point, out of 21, but it is also necessary to keep a watch on your blood pressure.

Bureaucracy tends to have the effect of raising it, and perhaps this game is a warning to the world against letting jumped up clerks get in a position of authority for which they are neither qualified, nor have the intelligence to handle.

With the $75 you were promised having failed to arrive, and your credit cards either expired, or had their limit exceeded, money becomes quite a problem. You have the airline ticket, but how will you pay for the cab?

There is plenty of text, born out by the fact that although the game isn't written in Infocom's large Interactive Fiction Plus system, the game is only available for the Plus range of machines — those with at least 128k of memory. Although a very funny game, occasionally the humour is overdone with too much text, to the extent of becoming a little childish.

On the whole, though, that is worth putting up with for the good bits, which account for most of the game. But £34.99 seems helluva price to pay. £10 less would be a lot more reasonable — so if you are a potential purchaser, watch out for clubs and mailorder firms offering discounts.

Although the Golden Mask is a "Quilled" graphics adventure, the author John Lemmon, has somehow managed to surpass even the quality of Demon from the Darkside with this one. In fact the only thing which prevented me awarding it a personal rating of 10, was the irritating way some descriptions were erased from the screen before I had half a chance to read them. Apart from that, The Golden Mask is an excellent adventure and well worth digging into your pockets for.

Hey! Wayne Bootleg here again, loud and proud and ready to rock. The response to my first music page in May was heavy. And I mean HEAVY. There's also another great competition. Ready? Let's rock.

UNSTOPPABLE FORCE

► ARTIST: AGENT STEEL

► LABEL: MUSIC FOR NATIONS (MFN 66)

When I heard this band's first album Skeptic's Apocalypse in 1985, I rated them as one of the up and coming metal bands. Well, it's taken quite a while for them to release their second album thanks to various legal problems with their old American label. But with all that behind they have finally delivered the goods!

With this album they have found the right balance between speed and heavy metal. Fast and furious, with masses of guitar solos from both of the band's guitarists, Juan Garcia and Bernie Versye, make the album a great wall of noise What makes this album for me are John Cyriss's vocals. He has a voice similar to Gillan's, but with the depth of Coverdale's and the soul of Dio's. He sings, shouts and screams his way through this album with a pleasing clarity. To sum up - good voice and, growling guitars make a great heavy metal, the Beastie Boys have mixed all that with rap, dub, hip hop and body poppin, and come out with a wild sound which will blow your mind. You can't put a label to the sound as there isn't one in existance and if there was it wouldn't fit.

You have to hear it to believe it. I am well versed in most forms of music, but honestly I have never ever - heard anything like this.

They have a raw, rough sound which gives your speakers a hard time! They break almost every recording principle in the book and it works.

You all must have heard the single Fight for the Right and seen the great video. Well believe me the album's even better.

The lyrics! Well these are a bit near the knuckle to say the least. If you really listen you will hear words and other sounds that are tucked away in the record that the record company couldn't have listened to. The songs are all about schools, girls, parties and adolesent life in general. They really know how to put this all over with feeling.

The three guys in the group, namely Ad-Rock, MOA and Mike D all lend a hand on the "vocals" which are rapped out in style over waves upon waves of wailing lead guitar and thumping, booming bass

These guys are flash, arrogant, warped, twisted, wild and wacky and I think they are great. This is the original album that

SCREAMS IN THE NIGHT

LABEL: MUSIC FOR NATIONS
(MFN 73)

I tried to like this album. I really did. I mean, lead singer Ann Boleyn has had a hard time. She formed the band in 1982 in a so-called haunted house where she lived

The neighbours organised a petition and forced her and the band to move out of the area. Then a managment deal with Ronnie Dio fell through and the band split up.

dream die and fought to put a new band together. This she did and after a highly successful tour they received recording offers from labels and producers. Ann finally chose Mikey Davies to produce this album and he has a pedigree that can boast the likes of producing the likes of Ted Nugent

So there you have the sad story of Ann Boleyn and Hellicon. I would like to say the album is great, but the fact is that they are just another run of the mill rock and roll band

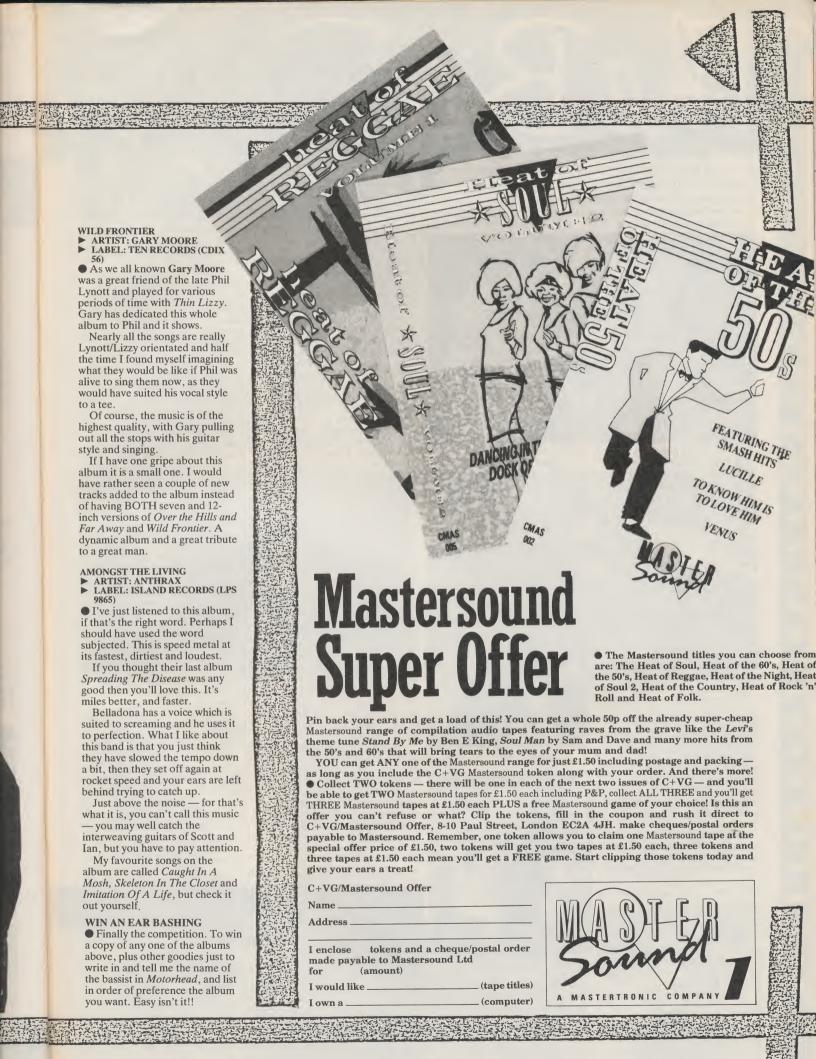

They give 110% effort, but I'm afraid it just doesn't click. Ann never gives her vocals a real chance. Half the time she ends up sounding like a watered down version of her ex-promoter, Ronnie Dio.

The rest of the band are quite competent, but the songs are musically shallow and the lyrics are, at times, downright over the top, even by heavy metal standards.

I'm afraid they will have to produce better quality stuff than this middle of the road drivel to impress the likes of me and, I suspect, you.

The Big Screen

SO, the film industry's off sunning itself in Cannes, but never fear, Ward R Street is here, pale from shadows of a thousand preview theatres, with all the news of what's new in the cinema.

A nybody out there catch the QED documentary on the NASA space camp about a month ago? It's your average summer camp...but with space shuttles!

If you have a look at the January issue you'll see an article we ran on the real Space Camp.

Space Camp (PG) looks like another of those movies where the filmmakers got every cooperation from the relevant authorities, and it's a hell of a good advert for these activity holidays. Boy, will you want to play with toys like Saturn Vs.

Playing is just what you shouldn't do though, especially when you're sitting atop a fully-fuelled shuttle on a launch pad. all it takes is a little interference from a malfunctioning droid whose artificial intelligence is a more like human stupidity and . . . 'We have lift off.'

The run up to the action is standard sort of brat pack fare as we get to meet the odd assortment of kids plus their teachers, but that NASA hardware keeps all systems go... sort of The Breakfast Club with boosters. It's when the hapless teenagers are boosted into space that the high-tech hi-jinx starts. Will they get back home in time for Captain Kangaroo, we ask?

The film's an odd mix of teen movie and Disneyish sci-fi... I'd have reprogrammed that cute droid immediately. But for some undemanding summer fun for the younger generation it certainly goes into orbit.

"What sort of boys become boxers?" a woman asks in Streets of Gold (15). "Poor boys," comes the reply.

▲ Rocky? Who he

▲ Golden boy wraps up.

Once again we're down the Rocky road, even down to the climactic fight against the Russians, but this knocks Sly's cold war heroics out in the first round. Firstly, it's got a bit more thought — not to mention the hint of plot behind it — and secondly, and most importantly, it's got Brandauer! That's Klaus Morid Brandauer to you, a heavyweight actor who floats like a butterfly, stings like a bee. He's Alek, a Russian emigree, lost and licking his wounds in an America which is fast turning into a nightmare rather than the dream he had hoped.

Alek used to be a championship boxer back in Mother Russia but he was also Jewish, which barred him from the national team. He's drowning in vodka laced with self-pity when he stumbles into a warehouse fight and sees two boys box, one black, one white. From then on he's determined to groom first one, then both, to take on the visiting USSR team in a personal grudge

There's all the action you could hope for down these mean streets, in the ring, the gym and among the street punks and hangers on. But there's also a sensitive side which surface once the final bell has sounded. And there's some serious criticism, both of Russia and America and their racism.

A stunning film with a knock-out ending which is all set for a return bout. But even if your could never stand Stallone's grunting, see this for Brandauer's eloquent performance.

There's more of the East Coast Jewish community in Woody Allen's Radio Days. It's a gentle, apparently unstructured, highly nostalgic film about what people did in the days before computers, videos, television.

In those days, radio was king, providing the romantic sister with a new dance to practice, mum and dad with panel games and for the teenage narrator, a juvenile Woody Allen, The Masked Avenger.

Radio was the stuff of dreams — in reality the Avenger is just a little, bald guy with a big, butch voice — and the film rambles on like a daydreqm, from the late 1930s through the war.

Obviously it's not Police Academy in its tone — in fact there are very few real laughs. But it's a film that leaves you feeling warm inside as you realise that there was a life before the microchip, and that some things never really change, such as the family fights and spying on the neighbours!

Now, what would a month be without at least one Michael Caine movie? Last time he saved us all as John Preston in The Fourth Protocol. In The Whistle Blower (PG) he's on the other side of the fence, as the father of a young man who works in the government's secret listening post, GCHQ.

The son, played by Nigel Havers, is fast becoming disillusioned with the sophisticated snooping devices that let him eavesdrop on interminably boring conversation between Russian bureaucrats.
What he doesn't realise is that someone's watching.

Security is a big topic at the moment, and I saw this in the week that the press started to scream about the mysterious deaths of four scientists involved in secret defence projects. It's a tribute, therefore, to the film's makers that its plot, which covers much the same ground, remains totally unconvincing!

And here's the winner of our silly hat competition...

This is the age of the train. Not many people know that ...

After the mundane world of Cheltenham bedsits, it's a relief to land in Hawaii, even if the local animal life does include a deadly Black Widow(15).

Don't like spiders? Well, this one hasn't got eight legs, she's only got two, but they're very nice and shapely and no doubt they help her no end in her seduction of elderly millionaires who die soon after their marriage to her.

tense as any Hitchcock, only without any of those touches that make The Master seem dated today.

Superb performances by the two women, dedicated Debra Winger and sexy chameleon Theresa Russell, and a clever script, just show that you don't need a macho hero to solve a mystery

Actually, this is obviously the month for psychological suspense films with a feminist angle. The Morning After (15) really does follow one of those nights nightmare, only to find that it's real. But Alex's real problem is that she can't be sure that she didn't kill the man in a fit of drunken rage.

So she goes on the run, through Los Angeles shot to make it look like a series of abstract blocks of dazzling colour and cool shade. Eventually she teams up with an ex-cop played in dumbly amiable fashion by Jeff Bridges. But can she prove her innocence before the cops decide otherwise?

Unluckily the film runs out of steam before its heroine does.

Now it's time for Something Wild and as this bizzare thriller is 18 rated, younger readers had better skip to the next paragraph immediately.
What? You peeked!
Well, stick with Ward

then, because I promise not to say anything that will corrupt you. However I am about to rave about a film that you won't be able to see - and Ward knows how hard that can remember for the rest of his life or the rest of the weekend — whichever comes first." With all the logic and switchback plot changes of a nightmare, Charlie is undone and rebuilt as his situation turns from comedy to thriller, then back again. Don't miss this . . . but ony if you're over 18!

Finally two British films, and their nationality shines through. High Season (15) is set on Rhodes and had me yearning to spend a holiday on the island.

It's a comedy which brings together an odd assortment of characters. from yobbo tourists to spies, all of whose doing seem qwite irrelevant in this quiet setting. A gentle film, full of feeling for the island people, it could have done with a firmer handling of the comedy. Fun though.

Prick Up Your Ears
(18) is the story of Joe Orton, the English sixties playwright who delighted in shocking the establishment with his bad taste, and who met

Spiderwomen look mean and moody.

In the Federal Justice Department Alexandra Barnes' boss can't believe that a woman could be so calculating and ruthless to commit so many murders, especially when there's no indication that they are murders. But Alex knows that a woman can be deadlier than the male.

She traces Catharine, the black widow, by comparing computer records from all over the country, but when her boss still won't assign her to the case she throws in her job and sets off on a personal vendetta, driven by her own deadly obsession.

Actually, I'm not sure that the spider image holds up all the way through, because the film soon becomes a game of cat and mouse as Alex finally catches up with Catharine on the Pacific island where she's already planning the fate of her next victim. It's as you wish you'd never had.

Jane Fonda plays another Alex, a faded actress who's turned too heavily to the bottle. Waking up next to a strange man doesn't come as too much of a surprise . but finding a knife in his heart does.

How would you react in a situation like that? There's a long, gripping sequence as the camera trails Fonda, watching her reactions. It's like waking up from a films that just won't be tied down. It's like After Hours, Into the Night, 91/2 weeks . . . and comes out all its own thing and better than all of them. The plot is so simple it defies description instead of paying his lunch bill, office worker Charlie Driggs (Jeff Daniels) takes off with an unknown woman, Lulu Hankel, (the lovely Melanie Griffith).

▼ That morning after feeling . . .

▲ Hey, fancy a ride in my really wild reliant robin?

As the publicity says. "It's an experience he'll his fate at the hands, or rather hammer, of his lover, Kenneth Halliwell.

The film itself doesn't shirk from the seedy, bad taste of Orton's own life, but it's a warm and moving experience for all that, with brilliant performances from Gary Oldman and Alfred Molina, who bitch like any old married couple. Not for everybody, but if the subject is of interest, it's wonderful.

WHAT'S THAT HAUNTING, EERIE, SCRAPING NOISE??

Don't worry it's you and you are the....

After a million long year's evolution the inevitable consequences of genetic engineering has materialised to haunt the galaxies, to terrorise the star systems and the beings that exist upon them. A race of Masters so feared that stories of their awesome powers are legend and the tales of havoc that they commit from the grotesque starship in which they collect galactic specimens, strike fear into the bodies of all inhabitants of planets upon which this vessel of doom casts its evil shadow. Fear that is in all except one single, savage neoreptilian creature, that too has felt the cataclysmic tremors of evolution and exists as the only living example of the one remaining lifeform that has the strength and cunning to resist the domination of the Masters.

Motivated by a sub conscious determination to perpetuate its tortuous existence the creature roams the labyrinthed depths of the space station seeking the hidden hibernation chambers in which the last remaining members of its rebellious race lie in suspended animation. There can only be one objective in its miserable existence... the freeing of its companions and the ultimate destruction of the monsterous Masters. How much pain can you withstand, how long can you last out before once again you can join with spirits of your own kind?

THE JAMES BOND DOSSIER

THE GAME

First Domark's game. Latest reports say that the programming of the game is progressing well.

These are the latest screen shots from the Amstrad version. Bond is the character in the white shirt. The man near him is a defecting Russian agent called Koskov who 007 must protect.

Lurking in the background are the bad guys intent on putting a few holes through Bond's nicely-pressed Saville Row shirt.

Richard Naylor, designer of The Living Daylights, is at the time of writing on a secret mission to the United States to check up on the programming teams working on the Atari ST and Amiga versions.

Latest reports indicate he's somewhere in the Salt Lake City area visiting Sculptured Software. The arcade machine version is also being produced in the US — using the Amiga board — by a Mastertronicowned company Arcadia.

Last month's C+VG James Bond Dossier included a rough outline of what to expect in the game, the backgrounds of which will be taken from the film.

There are ten levels in all with varying difficulties. Before each level

KA CORP

Bond has the chance to choose a weapon from the laboratory of gadet master Q. But be quick. There's only five seconds to choose.

There is a selection of weapons, from a ghetto-blaster rocket pack to a hand-held gun. The range varies from level to level, some even being able to be taken from one level to the next.

Bond is about one-fifth of the height of the screen and one-fourth of the width, and is controlled by numerous movements of the joystick. His Gun controls consist of a joystick for directions, the fire button for shooting and a second button to select between controlling Bond and the gun sights.

When the select button is pressed a red dot appears in the centre of the screen. At this point Bond stops, the dot can now be controlled around the screen. Bond will follow its movements with his gun arm. On pressing the fire button the gun will release a shot, if pressed quickly it will fire repeatedly. The gun has unlimited firepower! Level 1 — Gibraltar: Bond begins his adventure with a test of the defences on the island of Gibraltar in the Mediterranean. He must match his wits against the skills of the SAS armed only with a paint pellet gun.

As promised last month, C+VG now presents the second part of our exclusive James Bond Dossier on Domark's new game, The Living Daylights. We've got the latest screen shots, pictures from the new film and the inside information on 007's fantastic Aston Martin Vantage. Our word is our Bond.

The Living Daylights is due for simultaneous release across all major formats. It will also be out on an areade machine.

If all goes according to plan it will probably be a world's first that a computer and arcade game have been written from the same specification.

Add to that the blaze of publicity that is about to be unleashed surrounding Timothy Dalton's debut as James Bond in The Living Daylights, then you're going to have to skip the planet to escape 007.

After all, it is only a mock battle, or is it? Could one of the SAS men really be an enemy agent in disguise? Take care, he is out to kill!

Level 2 — The Lenin People's Music Conservatory: Bond must get the Russian defector Koskov away from his KGB guards without injuring any of the music lovers enjoying the show inside. Koskov will follow but it is up to Bond to defend him from the snipers who appear all over the building. Level 3 — The Pipeline: Bond must smuggle Koskov past the pipe workers and send him on his way down the Trans-Siberian Pipeline. Level 4 — The Mansion House: Koskov has been rescued but somebody wants him back! They have sent the ruthless killer Necros to snatch him back from the British Secret Service. Disguised as a milkman, he and his friends will try every dirty trick to get Koskov back. Watch out!

Level 5 — The Fairground: Bond must meet his fellow agent but Necros has followed you and he has orders to kill! Level 6 — Tangiers: Bond's mission to find the missing Koskov takes him to the rooftops of Tangiers where he must battle for his life.

Level 7 — The Plane (not in all formats): Captured by the enemy, Bond is being flown to an unknown destination. Can he escape in time? Level 8 — The Military Complex: Trapped in the desert of Afghanistan in the middle of a Russian Air Base. Watch out as the enemy release all their forces against Bond. Level 9 — Whittaker's House: Bond finally meets the Mastermind behind the dastardly plot — Brad Whittaker, the American Arms dealer and military historian. He unleashes all the power of his arsenal against 007.

The game will be available for the following micros: Spectrum, Commodore 64, Amstrad CPC, Atari, Amiga, BBC and Electron, C16, Amstrad PCW and MSX.

Prices are yet to be announced but cassette copies will be £9.95.

THE FILM

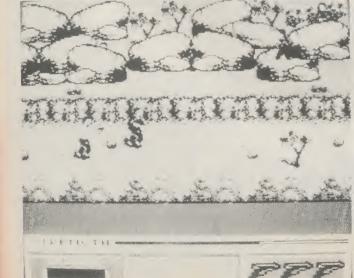

The Living Daylights is produced by Albert R. Broccoli and Michael G. Wilson with Bond being played by Timothy Dalton for the first time.

Filming was carried out at Pinewood Studios and also in numerous locations: Vienna, Gibraltar, Tangiers, Quarzazate and Reschen Am See — a lakeside hamlet in Northern Italy.

The ever-faithful Aston Martin returns, this time it's the 160 Vantage — Bond's hightech version suitably equipped with sophisticated, yet lethal, gadgets!

The story: James Bond has recently returned from Gibraltar on exercises, to be sent on a new mission to

THE JAMES BOND DOSSIER

Bratislava masterminding the defection of KGB General Koskov. Despite an attempt on his life by beautiful Czech cellist Kara, Koskov is eventually brought safely to London.

Unfortunately, Koskov is abducted by Necros, a ruthless killer. 'M', suspecting the KGB, sends Bond to serve a termination warrant on General Pushkin, who is known to be in Tangiers with a Trade Delegation.

Before doing this Bond decides to return to Bratislava to try to get closer to the beautiful Kara. This he does and discovers that Kara is an innocent victim of the Russian general. He also learns of Koskov's involvement with International Arms Dealer Brad Whittaker. In true 007 style, Kara is rescued and taken to Vienna where she succumbs to the Bond charm.

Bond, together with Kara, move on to Tangiers where Bond eventually confronts General Pushkin in his hotel. They plan together to trap Koskov and Whittaker.

Bond and Kara are taken prisoner by Koskov and flown to Russian-occupied Afghanistan, but it is not long before Bond breaks free with Kara and Kamran Shah, the leader of a group of Afghan freedom fighters. Together they find out what Koskov and Whittaker are up to — smuggling raw opium.

It is obvious that they must be stopped, so with the support of Kamran's rebel group they overcome masses of Koskov's troops and allies in an attempt to prevent the opium leaving the country. The final mopping up is at Whittaker's Tangiers villa.

BOND'S CAR

Bond's cars are always scene-stealers and his Aston Martin 160 Vantage will be no exception.

C+VG visited Pinewood film studios to take a look at this mean machine

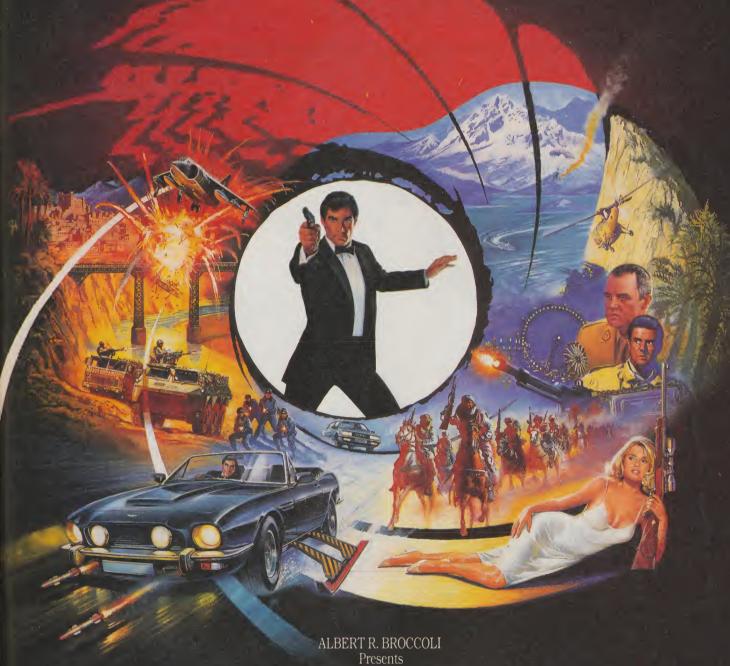

It can accelerate from 0 to 60mph in six seconds. And that's not all. It is equipped with two missiles at the front, laser beams in all four hub caps — they rip into enemy cars that come a little too close — a jet booster to give it more zip than a jet fighter, out rigger skis and spiked tyres to get a grip on ice and snow.

The Bondmobile will be setting off on a world tour soon to promote the film

Clare Edgeley lets you have a peek at the most horrifying arcade game yet - Alien Syndrome. And Paul Boughton tries his hand at basketball with Dunk Shot.

DOUBLE DRAGON

The streets are full of garbage, and through them run gangs of lawless thugs. Knives are drawn and baseball bats are swung at every whose girl has been kidnapped from under your very nose.

Sordid street fights are great fun when you've got the guts and, if you manage to get the hang of the controls in Taito's Double Dragon, you should have no trouble. It takes a bit of practise learning to manipulate the joystick, punch and lash you to the ground and then wipe her feet on your back as you're biting the dirt. She's an easy knockout though, just throw three punches and she'll collapse, pick up her whip and use it on her buddies. One of these is a huge brute looking like Mr T of A-Team fame and built like him too.

tame and built like him too.

Towering above you, tread warily
when his blood's up.

For weapons use whatever's to hand — rocks, cardboard boxes and barrels can be picked up and chucked at your assailants, knives, whips and dynamite can be grabbed from the thugs once you've knocked them out. Elbow punches, left and right jump kicks, a round kick and side kicks all come in useful when three or four brutes set on you at once. Three direct hits knock them out as a rule, but they soon come round.

As you fight your way through the streets, you'll be able to make use of ladders, the roofs of warehouses and the like to escape or ambush the gangs.

Double Dragon could be a lot faster, all the ingredients are there for a really addictive, martial arts style kick 'em to bits.

ALIEN SYNDROME

Alien Syndrome is one of the most gripping games I've played in recent months and Sega earns a pat on the back for the game — special effects, sound, graphics and gameplay.

Alien Syndrome is like walking into the coin-op version of the movie Aliens. One minute you're movie Aliens. One minute you're standing in a deafening arcade, the next, with a bit of imagination, you're transported to a sinister space ship, overun with disgusting, pulsating aliens who've taken the 16 members of the crew hostage. "The time-bomb is set", intones a heavy voice, the music sounds like a cross between Jaws and an old Vincent Price horror movie, and round a corner seeths a mass of grotesquely fat, undulating worms. Occasionally one mutates, a jaw with jagged teeth appears for an instant before it reverses itself to become once more a squirming instant before it reverses itself to become once more a squirming mass. Others are busy producing small replicas of themselves, almost faster than you can kill them.

Only trouble is your single fire laser isn't much help. Run quickly to one of the lock-ups dotted round the area and burst it open. With luck you should find a flame thrower, rapid fire laser, protective luck you should find a flame thrower, rapid fire laser, protective droids or long range laser cannon. Scouting round the outside edge of the space ship, you quickly come across the first unfortunate crew member tied up with a sticky mass of alien gunge to the wall. Run over him to set him free. But be quick, there are another 15 to find and the bomb is already ticking away.

Muted screams are heard in the Muted screams are heard in the distance, but none more horrible than your own should you happen to fall foul of one of these disgusting creatures. As Alien Syndrome is a two player game you have the choice of playing a women or man, and it's the women or man, and it's the woman's scream which is so shocking. I've never heard anything so loud, and chilling on a coin-op before — it's guaranteed to send shivers down your spine. The bloke's scream is more of a wimper and doesn't sound nearly as lifelike.

The music hots up sounding a warning as your free the hostages. The aliens start to congregate in areas to block you off and you'll have to make good use of the maps to find the locations of the rest of the crew. When they've all been rescued, hot foot it to the exit where you escape straight into the arms of a REAL monster. This grows more terrible on each level grows more terrible on each level and takes many shots to kill. Writhing and changing its shape at will, one second growing mouth and teeth, the next surging forward, it's surrounded by small replicas of itself, each one spawning yet more replicas. This is when you really need your mate playing with you — the combined tirepower is vital it you're to proceed onto the next level.

Alien Syndrome is played in the Gauntlet style, with an overhead view, and scrolling screen which maps out in all directions.

Further levels become more tricky in layout with narrow bridges to negotiate.

Apart from sit-in racing games where you feel a part of the machine, this is the first time the atmosphere and sheer addictiveness of a shoot 'em up has transported me to another planet. Alien Syndrome is fantastic.

Play it if you dare!

If you've ever played basketball you'll know it helps to be reasonably tall — being anything over, say, seven foot gives you a distinct advantage. It's just a matter of strolling up to the basket and dropping the ball in. None of these frantic efforts to hurl your puny and tiny frame into orbit in an effort to score.

Well with Sega's Dunk Shot you cannot only join the big guys on the court, you can actually look down on them.

I don't normally like table top arcade games, I always feel a little detached from the play. It's the same with Dunk Shot. You feel as if you're clinging to the roof and could plunge down onto the court at any time.

gripe, Dunk Shot is a Sega sensation, ace graphics, brilliant sound, fast action where the skills have to be learned.

have to be learned.

The playing area is bigger than the screen so the game scrolls back and forth. But you can keep an eye on where your players are on a grid of little dots. This is okay, but in the fast and furious play it's a little difficult to take your eye off the game and consult it. I tended to find that the opposition zipped through my defences and scored.

When you shoot make sure you lend an ear to the sound of the ball hitting the rim of the basket. It's hitting the rim of the basket. It's imega-realistic.

But the crowning glory of Dunk Shot for me is the way players leap up to get the ball, growing larger as they seem to get nearer to you.
Dunk Shot makes a nice change from all the hack 'n' slash and blast 'em up games. A winner.

In an age in which honour was revered, from a time when grace and beauty were virtues, a class of warriors set themselves apart to dedicate their lives to a perfection in combat that in itself was an artform, to a discipline of mind that became a religion. The attaining of such excellence required an extraordinary diligence in self-denial and training in order to achieve the ultimate accolade 'War Lord'. Kendo, Karate and finally Samurai are the tests that must be mastered before such honour can be bestowed.

I.D.E.A.S CENTRAL

All right you lot — what's happened to all the hints, tips and pokes. Could it be that it's that dreaded time of the year when exams are looming or could it be that you are still drooling over my poster. Then again it could be that you are just too darn lazy. Well, whatever the excuse, I am not happy! Do you think I enjoy getting loads of letters saying "you never print any hints, etc for MY computer". What do you want me to do — make them up. So please, please inundate me with letters and I can pay you for info. Send them to me — Melissa Ravenflame, I.C.

NETHER EARTH

Settle down for some pretty complex hints from Edward Hartnell of Swansea. If you can make head or tail of this lot then you deserve to complete Nether Earth.

Build a few lightly armed, fastmoving robots to capture nearby factories. You will need no more than two or three such robots, equipped with cannon and tracker or, preferably, anti-grav chassis units. Send one ahead and leave the other to capture the nearby neutral factories. Taking manual control of the advanced robot, use it to capture neutral and enemy factories, as well as terminating enemy robots. Once well equipped enemy robots begin to appear take up a defensive position and try and hold off the Insignians for as long as possible. When this robot is finally destroyed retreat to Kerberus and with you accumulated resources build battle robots. The best such robots consist of an anti-grav propulsion unit allied with missiles, phasers and an electronic support module. Never economise on the chassis, since the speed with which a robot can turn to face an adversary is just as important as the strength of its weapon systems. Generally the larger the amount of resource points spent on a robot the more cost-effective it will be.

Order your robots to search and destroy enemy robots. Advance and ambush the enemy robots moving forward when a convenient gap appears. Occupy the entrance to Tarra's Warbase and hold it for 12 hours. During this crucial time, manually direct your robot in combat mode. When the heli-pad appears land on it and construct more battle robots. Order about a third to capture enemy factories and the rest to destroy robots. Now retreat and manually guide out any robots stuck in the maze-like approach to Tarras. Again build as many robots as your resources allow and order these to destroy enemy

Once this section has been cleared take control of one of the foremost robots. Advance slowly, firing constantly and clear the area of enemy robots. Then occupy and hold the entrance to Faretra Warbase until the heli-pad appears. Build more robots with the same orders as before. Now direct any stuck robots through to Faretra. By now the Insignians should control only a handful of robots. Build robots as before. But with the addition of nuclear bombs. Order the robots to seek and destroy the enemy robots . . . advance and take control of a battle robot. Use this to eliminate the remaining Insignian robots. Now you have two choices. You can either use this robot to capture the final Insignian Warbase or you can use a nuclear-equipped droid to incinerate it. The choice is yours!

GENERAL HINTS

Nuclear weapons — generally it is not worth using these to destroy enemy warbases or factories. However, they are extremely useful for clearing obstructing walls, such as those on the approach to the warbases. Build a small robot, such as those on the approach to the warbases. Build a small robot, armed only with a bomb and advance on the obstruction. Retreat all robots at least five miles, then manually detonate to destroy the wall.

Robot Combat — when manually controlling your robot use combat mode which will give you quick access to its weapons. In combat let your enemy come to you. Try to stay on the edges of the screen or behind full blocks to restrict the angles you can be attacked from. Try to deal with one enemy at a time and above all, do not stray into another robot's field of fire.

CHAMELEON

Martin Walker, the programmer of Chameleon, sent these hints in for C+VG readers. The secret of playing the game is to learn the best alignment to combat each type of demon. Demons have intelligence and will dodge your shots if they can. To fire rapidly, hold the joystick button down and keep jabbing the stick in the desired direction. When you collect the tainted flux from the path the ruling demons will swarm at you. Be prepared! If you get hemmed in by a swarm of sky demons and are running low on energy, duck and stay down until a suitable path demon comes along to give you more energy. As you get further into the game, the sky demons will all begin to demonstrate different super powers. You will have to develop different tactics to destroy each. Watch out especially for the Blizzard demons in the second water realm. Align yourself to water and turn all the bubbles to sparklers to keep your energy topped up.

Getting Extra Energy — any energy lost through firing, stepping in pools or colliding with demons can be topped up by firing at an aligned path demon — Sparks if Chameleon is aligned to fire — this turns the path demon to pure energy (a sparkler) and can be picked up by touching it.

Rules of the Elements — fire destroys water and turns earth to fire. Earth blocks water, air blows out fire, and water destroys fire and turns air to water.

INTO THE EAGLE'S NEST

BASEMENT

The game to get David Harvey's mapping talents going this month is Into the Eagle's Nest. Here are the first two levels with a few hints. As well as walking into doors, you can shoot them. The first-aid kit reduces hits to zero and the food to ten. Only shoot the chest once, as there might be dynamite in it. Try to stand behind something and edge out gently - you can now blast them. To get the prisoner out of your way, shoot him in the direction you want to do in. Look out for the next two levels in I.C. next month.

Melvyn Jones of South Yorkshire bought Tarzan for the Amstrad 464 and after a couple of days was horrified to find out that Tarzan can't get over the long piece of quick sand — even though there is a swing! Can anyone help before he cracks up?

Ánother frustrated Amstrad owner is Michael O'Sullivan of London. His problem is with Ghosts 'n' Goblins — he can't pass the goblin on the first level.

Peter Leung of Luton is a C16 owner who is having problems with Airwolf. He feels you don't have many lives and there are too many objects flying about. Anyone have any pokes for Peter. He would also like a poke for Bandits at Zero.

GROUND FLOOR

GAUNTLET COMBATTIPS

On the first level, ignore the exits to four and eight, as the first eight levels don't present much of a problem and jumping to level eight will just waste valuable food and potions.

In general, keep your distance from the enemy. Don't fight hand-to-hand with Demons, Grunts and Sorcerers. It may score more points but it rapidly depletes your health. Fight hand-to-hand with lobbers as they put up little resistance and are easily Always destroy the generators before disposing of the army. Only use potions on death if there are three or more. If there is more than one death on the level, entice them to a particular section of the maze and use a potion. It is possible to hit across keys and exits in order to hit what is on the opposite side. Remember, it is possible to shoot diagonally through gaps. It is also possible to destroy quite a few generators by standing on the same spot.

Don't carry too many keys as it is possible to become trapped, in which case you will have to wait for the walls to turn into exits. When you have collected the amulet of invisibility, destroy as many generators as possible. The creatures will not attack but ghosts speed around the screen randomly — so be ready. Meat is always indestructible but cider can be destroyed. Cider marked 'xxx' is safe to drink, if it is marked 'oxo' then shoot it as it is poisonous. Examine food carefully — a mistake could result in the loss of a valuable potion.

Indestructible potions are yellow, normal potions are blue. If a potion is located in a treasure room then try and find it rather than the exit — it will prove more valuable.

In a one-player game, it is best to choose the wizard as he has the best magic power — capable of clearing the entire screen and good shot power, the other attributes can be collected. Don't collect all the treasure, some of it traps monsters or prevents their shots from hitting you, and can often be used to restrict the movement of death. If you start on a hard level with little food around, it is best to wait until the walls turn to exits — this way you lose less health. Be very careful when you are near locked doors, only open one at a time and clear whatever is behind it. Try to clear as much of the level as possible before standing on a trap.

Using this method J. Blakeley of Leeds found it possible to score 9,999 health points, at which point it is almost impossible to die.

There certainly are. But you'd have to look pretty hard to find any evidence of that in your local newsagent's shop. The few publishers brave enough to put out comics for older readers comics for older readers have met with firm resistance from the news trade, who don't think such things would sell.

The same has been true, to same extent, in America. But go to any of our more culturally

Fancy getting your face in the frame? Yup, you could become a comic book hero in our great US Gold/Accolade comic competition. Thanks to the awesome and totally amazing technology available to C+VG thanks to the Ideas Corp's American Rosenthal Division we are able to put Your face into a computer screen. Five winners will receive an exclusive framed high quality colour print of a "page" from the Comics game complete with your incredibly handsome face smiling out of it.

Now there's something to impress your friends with! If you are one of or five winners we'll ask you to send a picture of yoruself - or if you're local to the C-VG office invite you in to have your picture taken by none other than ace lensman Paul Boughton! Then your picture will be flown, via Concorde, to New York where Marshal will digitise you into a computer comic book. Then the resulting high quality print will be framed and flown back on a vir flight to London and mailed direct to your home! Talk about exclusive! Just answer these simple comic questions and your face could win a flight on Concorde, Normal C+VG rules apply and the closing date is July

My answers are:

Know what I want to be when I grow up? No, not an astronaut, or a rock star, what I want is to be a comic book hero! So how can I resist the lure of having a go at Accolade's Comics?

This is the FIRST interactive comic book. Steve Keene is your Superspy alter ego. He's hip, shrewd, daring, and just a bit of a smarty-pants.

The mission unfolds before your eyes as individual panels appear on screen. Each panel is one piece of the action, and there are six of them to each "page" — the bottom two scroll to the top after they are presented.

A number of things can happen in a panel. There might be an animated sequence to watch for clues and information. Or perhaps vital dialogue going on between you and other people. The word balloons over your head change to match your whim or mood of the moment.

Certain events force you to fight for that next panel, or to be more explicit — for your life! Suddenly you find yourself in one of eight arcade sequences, dodging missiles and bombs, battling robots or sharks. You must overcome this "game within a game" before you can continue.

You can also make a wrong decision leading to violent results in the panels part as

Comics gives you two different stories to participate in. In one, you must rescue a not-so-mad scientist and his secret formulae from evil hands

Comics will be released in the UK by US Gold for the C64. Price to be announced. Accolade can be found at 20813 Stevens Creek Blvd, Cupertino, Califonia 95014,

After a few quiet months Elite explodes into action with Cataball, Airwolf II and the Great Guryanos! Check out newies from Gremlin, Alien Evolution and Re-Bounder and take on the rampaging rodent, Ninja Hamster from CRL.

No nukes is good nukes, unless you're Mrs T, but the subject of Armageddon continues to fascinate games programmers. ACTIVISION are preparing to launch HIGH FRONTIERS, a simulation of President Raygun's favourite toy — the so-called Star Wars defence system. Written by ALAN STEEL, coauthor of Theatre Europe, HIGH FRONTIER puts you in charge of the SDI system — its development and deployment. It's like a game of Risk with amazingly high stakes.

Spend cash to develop the system, fight a war of words with the Soviet block, and make up your mind if YOU would press the button to start World War Three. But remember, in this game there can be no winners. One for strategy freaks this—it comes with a huge instruction booklet explaining the SDI version. HIGH FRONTIER should be available in July for the C64 and Amstrad at £9.99 tape, £14.99 disc. The Spectrum version will cost £7.99.

Hii-eek! It's Ninja Hamster, the perfect antidote to karate games, from CRL. The hero is a rampaging rodent who has to save theworld from evil animals like the sinister Rat and The Lizard of Death!

It's a game that has to be seen to be believed — the Ninja Hamster has huge ham-fists and a deadly flying kick. His adversaries are equally dangerous — especially the neat Lizard who used his tail as well as his fists to KO our furry hero.

First version to hit the streets will be for the Spectrum, a snip at £7.95. C64 and Amstrad versions will follow. It's fun to play and great to look at.

Remember Gremlin's Bounder? Well get an eyeful of Re-Bounder, its sequel. We're back in the 3D world of hexagonal slabs, collapsing floors, mystery bonuses and angry aliens. You must control your "tennis ball" through 18 levels of breakneck action. These pictures are from the Commodore version.

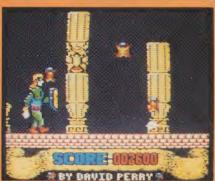

Anco continues its sporting games — others include Winter Events and Summer Events — with International Events, due out on the Spectrum (£7.95) and Amstrad (£8.95). Sports featured are hang-gliding, wind surfing, motor bike scrambling, cross country, water ski-jump and vellodrome cycle race — that's where two can play simultaneously.

And they aren't just any old games either. You get a coin-op conversion, the sequel to one of Elite's best sellers, plus an entirely original game all in one highly playable package.

We're talking about the arcade combat game Great Guryanos, Airwolf II plus 3DC on the Speccy and Amstrad and a neat bouncing ball type game called Cataball on the 64.

Great Guryanos is a scrolling combat game in the Rygar mode — although the coin-op original appeared light years ago. The computer version features large cartoon style characters and lots of armed conflict. 3DC is an isometric arcade adventure set underwater. Your diving-suited hero has to rebuild a lost submarine while battling creatures of the deep. Airwolf II features that world famous helicopter on a new mission which owes a lot to Salamander and Nemesis. An addictive shoot 'em up with lots of neat frills.

Cataball is another addictive and different offering. You guide four bouncing balls across various landscapes in a quest for lost balloons.

Sounds silly — but it's extremely playable. You can lose your balls — if you'll pardon the expression — one by one as you encounter different hazards.

Each game could be released as a full price game — but it's nice to see Elite thinking about your pockets and offering this bumper bundle as a compilation.

All cassette versions of the game will set you back £9.95 while disk owners will have to fork out £14.95. In your shops in July.

Portuguese programmers Marco and Rui Tito are the new names behind Gremlin's Alien Evolution out this month at £4.99 It's set in the aftermath of a nuclear holocaust where the earth's surface is a barren and hostile place, incapable of supporting human life. The survivors withdrew to underground complexes, and now, after years of dedicated research, they have produced an android, Cyborg 64, who may provide the answer to their prayers.

The problem is that a race of unusual aliens has populated the earth and are less than keen to relinquish their newly found homestead.

Alien Evolution is played from a 3D prespective, looking down at the plant, and features transporters to zap you from area to area. Monochrome graphics and full scolling are also included.

Meanwhile, here's a look at Gremlin's The Final Matrix out soon on Spectrum, MSX (£7.99), and Amstrad (£9.99)

Nimrod is a member of a friendly race called the Bioptons, a mechanical people who are very friendly and fond of socialising.

During an outing hostile Cratons abducted a party of Bioptons, and scattered them across the galaxy on their matrix network of space prisons. Bioptons have delegated the rescue of their countrymen to Nimrod!

It's impossible for Nimrod to land his craft on the matrix, his only option is to actually land himself and retrieve the hostages individually. Nimrod has an added handicap — no one really knows where each matrix is or even how many there are. His quest begins in a Bioton spacecraft fitted with the Bioton's most advanced navigational aid — the Pentavision. Using the display monitor, he can locate each matrix and manoeuvre his ship into the correct position to land.

Once on a matrix the fun beings! Nimrod has to find the hostage and launch back to his ship as quickly as possible.

ACHINE: AMIGA EWER: CHRIS

Sinbad is the newest Amiga release in the Cinemaware range, from the people who brought you Defender of the Crown.

The game was not programmed by exactly the same people though, and it's easy to see. But, enough of this. Here's the plot.

One day the Princess Sylphani, a very pretty young lady, was about to give her father his early morning call, when she discovered something strange.

The Caliph had been transformed by some no-good, evil, son of a OK OK, we get the message — Ed) into a falcon. And as the people would not be ruled by a feathered king, things looked bleak.

Sinbad was summoned by the Princess to see if he could shed some light on this unfortunate state of affairs.

Sinbad takes the Princess and her brother on a voyage seeking the answer to this riddle.

Sinbad first visits The Shaman, a very wise god-like man who is about the only person skilled in the art of turning falcons into people. Very handy.

He says that to release the Caliph, Sinbad must collect three eyes from three sisters, and the wing of a demon.

Not being the things you find in the local supermarket, this is going to be tough!

Sinbad can ask various people questions, and by collating information together, he can try to understand the Shaman's needs.

You find out the locations of the sisters by questioning the Caliph's ex-wife, Libitina. She has knowledge of the black arts, as used in Intuition, you can easily move Sinbad throughout this magical world of witches and genies. A joystick is also required for the action sequences!

Sword fighting is the best, and it just goes to show what the Amiga can do. As you slash your opponent across the ribs, you get a realistic cry of pain, and blood flies everywhere, Great stuff!

The rest of the game is mostly text, but is well written and often amusing. I particularly liked the bit about cages made of whole trees!

While travelling about, you have the option of viewing three screens. These are

The World — A map of Sinbad's world, which you analyse with a magnifying glass you, but you only get the customary three wishes. So far this all sound impressive, but what about graphics and sound. Well, the graphics are not up to usual Amiga standard, but they are quite colourful. At certain points in the game, it gets really blocky, and I don't understand this at all.

The lowest resolution is 320x200, which is the high-res on the 64, so why the chunks.
The sound, however, is totally different. A fantastic 'Arabian Knights' soundtrack fits the game perfectly, and the sound effects are fab too. I particularly liked the misic when you get seduced, real heavy.

So, the pics are pretty, the sound is amazing, and the control is easy as pie, but that doesn't make a good game.

Playability is there, but the game is a bit easy.
I finished the game after five to six goes, and got to live happily ever after with the Princess. It turns out that it was Libitina who assaulted the Caliph's appearence, but I knew it all along.

Not bad, although not as good as Defender of the Crown.

Oh, yes Mindscape quote the word 'Adult entertainment' more than once in the instructions. As this cannot apply to Sinbad, does this mean we will be seeing 'X' cert Cinemaware products.

We live in hope. . .

will grant thee 3 wishes. back to your lamp; I Il summon you later.

Libitina is also very evil. She will try to seduce you, and although you will enjoy it, it pays to be careful. But, having said that, you'll miss some wonderful graphic sequences!!!

Buy using pull down menus.

– a nice touch — to find your way about. The City-This screen shows the hour glass, which displays the time limit, and also the amount of jewels collected.

Each screen must be used at some point, and you must also govern the Caliph's forces in defending Damaron, this adds to the strategy.

When you travel about the oceans, you may come across a shipwreck, another action sripwieck, another action screen. This entails you steering around rocks, and picking up survivors, who shout 'Thanks' in a muffled digitised voice.

If you hit a rock, the game is over, and so begins the tale of Sinbad's underwater adventures. . . Still, it's worth croaking once, just to see death standing by the cinema curtains, scythe in

Also, there are random features in the game, such as the ROC. This mythical creature will snatch crew members for its dinner quite unexpectedly.

With all these things against you, what do you have going for you, well there's Genie. When found he will help

AMIGA

Starglider, da, da, da, de, dum, do, dol Yeah, that famous 17 second tune, the colourful

ରଚ୍ଚତ୍ର ପ୍ରତ୍ୟ ବର୍ଷ

vector graphics, and digitised speech can only mean one thing

And that's Starglider. The famous shoot-'em-up cum tactical game which first got the Atari ST noticed, has now, at last, arrived on the Amiga.

The game uses vector graphics, similar to those in Mercenary and Battlezone, although of a much higher quality Based around the

Follet, Starglider is the story of Jaysan, and his attempt to destroy the Egrons' fleet.

Who are the Egrons? Well they're a nasty bunch trying to destroy your planet, and of course, you can't have that. Flying your AGAV fighter in a manner similar to Skyfox, you will come across plenty of nasties to blow away. All displayed in lovely vectors and at this point you can do little else but marvel at what Jez San, the man responsible for this masterpiece, has achieved.

The Walkers walk convincingly around the screen, the Bute fighters dodge your laser blasts with amazing manoeuvres, and the Starglider flaps about in the most menacing way.

All this, and not a flicker to be seen. Incredible!

But enough about the graphics, let's get back to the game. Being a shoot-'em-to-bits

Starglider is instantly playable, but you will soon find yourself being shot down time and time again, unless you think about what your doing.

Using the excellent novella, you must work out how to stay alive, refuel your ship and destroy the Egron flagship, Starglider One.

Starglider One, the orange bird, is mean and extremely weakpoint, and it is this which you must expose if you have any idea about saving Novenia.
When entering the docking bay, you may be able to collect a missile. If this is possible, the screen will flash green and you will automatically have it. But, you can only carry two missiles at any one time.

The amazing graphics are accompanied by superb sound, which has been dramatically altered since the original ST version. The game now features not only the original music, played whilst loading, but also a new stereo tune which is heard once the game has loaded.

The sound effects have also been beefed up, and are now sampled, giving a lot more realism to explosions.

The other vital ingredient which is of course the speech, which is of course the speech, courtersy of the lovely Miss Edgeley, has been made much clearer. So when you hear things such as 'Missile Launched' or 'Energy Low', it sounds as if Clare is right next to you. Plus, all sound is in stereo, for a quick example hook the Amiga to your hi-fi, and fire to the left or right of the screen. The sound comes from the corresponding speaker!

The game also runs faster on the Amiga, which means you get faster lasers, and things don't slow down when there's a lot of action on the screen.

Even the options have been increased, you now get to choose between normal and self-centring sights, and there are several settings for fixed sights.

must also mention that the game can now be played with a joystick, a special routine has been implemented which allows the stick to act like a

2-button mouse. When you finally have your lights put out, you receive a status sheet as to how well you performed. The sheet consists performed. The sheet consists of accuracy, shots fired and generally gives you a rating. The ratings are Rookie, Poor (That's mel), Fair, Average, Above Average, Accurate, Deadly, Super Flyer, Ace Pilot, and finally Commander.

I say finally, but there is one more rating. This is a very apt one for someone who scores one for someone who scores this high.

When you get good enough to enter your name in the score table, you have the option of saving it to disk. This wasn't included in the ST version, but it means that your friend's score stays there until you top it!

Starglider just goes to prove what I've always said about Rainbird, they are in the elite of software houses and are constantly turning out new and original material.

I also think they were lucky to find Jez, who has to be one of the best Amiga programmers around. He has taken the machine further than anyone else to produce what I call a true Amiga game.

All that can be said now is three cheers for Rainbird, three cheers for Jez.

TESTED: AMIGA REVIEWER: CHRIS

Sónar reports distant explosions. Hmmm, Ok, up periscope and give me bow torpedoes one and two. Were going put this sucker under once and for all.

Hold her steady . . . FIRE! . . . and another goes to meet Davy

That could have been a scene from a John Wayne epic, but it was actually a true experience from Silent Service. What's the Silent Service?

Well it's what the Americans used to call the people who fought in submaries, those relentless old sea dogs who went up against the Japanese

And, it's also the name of this truly wonderful simulation game, by those clever Microprose people. The simulation enables the player to become a WWII US sub Capt., and to fight some of the deadly battles that went on at that time.

Unlike most simulations I've come across, SS is very easy to operate. It's icon controlled, and although very complex, is explained very clearly in the accompanying documentation.

When you start, you can choose what sort of thing you'd like to try. There's Torpedo practice, Convoy actions and the main one, War Patrols. Each section is well presented and can be made extremely difficult, depending on the reality levels

The reality levels are just one of the special features making the game very playable indeed. But what do they do? Well, one of the options is visibility, another Dud Torpedoes.

If you set visibility to limited, you can only see enemy targets in your area. This is more realistic than knowing where they are all the time, and as for dud torpedoes it speaks for itself.

Once you've completed several Convoys, you should attempt a war patrol. This involves following one of the patrolling the waters for Japanese war fleets.
The maps are vital as they show the path taken by various types of enemy craft, and they also enhance the excitement.

When playing the game, you use various Battlestations screens, which consist of a periscope, maps, a screen, a dial and a gauges screen and of course the bridge. The bridge is the least important really, but where would you be without a periscope.

Once you've found the enemy, you will wish to give him an early retirement. When he is in range you can do this with either Torpedoes, the main weapon, or a four inch deck gun which is used for destroying already damaged craft.

Silent Service is extremely playable and fun, whilst giving an accurate account of submarine warfare, a must for every simulation addict

Gunship, another excellent simulation, is being converted at this very mo, and I can't wait.

ACTIVISION VIEWER: CHRIS

The Hacker series just goes to prove what I've always said about Yanks, they can't do about Yanks, they can't do anything by themselves.

Once again, the amazing 'know it all' American ClA need your help, and you're just an ordinary guy, or gal.
This time, they interrupt you whilst you're browsing through the latest on-line software chart, and beg you to help them It seems the Russians (surprise, surprise) have some kind of notebook which contains the stuff that brings countries, worlds and galaxies to their knees.

Of course the papers are quarded in a maximum security building in Siberia, which isn't the world's hottest tourist spot.

Using a US satellite, you can get into the complex with your micro, and consequently control a droid which the Americans have managed to sneak in.

Using your micro, you have managed to tap into a security camera, and you are able to use this to look around. There are other cameras about, but you have no control over them

But you may jam their signal, and run a pre-recorded tape past them, so you can step in front without being squealed

Doing this takes care, and you must match the camera signal time with the video exactly, otherwise you will be detected When you are detected, the Russians send out a thing called the 'Annihilator'. You have probably guessed what this does. But it does it in a most humorous way, mashing your MRU over the head. The sound effects here are great, listen out.

So, we've got four displays on the screen, three cameras, and the fourth is the TGS. This is your guidance around the complex, and when you move it, it moves along as well, simple.

You are told that the papers are in a vault, which you will be able to find pretty quickly. However, you must first get the combination. This is in four or five parts, and each part is in a coded filing cabinet somewhere in the building.
You are given the code for one of the cabinets, and must work out the rest for yourself

All this sounds pretty simple for the accomplished hacker, so to make life more enjoyable, there are messages which pop up every once in a while.

These range from "camera detection loss", which means you can't tell where the moving cameras are around the building, to "droid detection loss", meaning complete loss of your guidance systems. So

And that's about it, gameplay-wise. Just find the combination, open the vault, and choose the right papers to get home. But it's damn hard trying to do it.

AMICA

Hi, and welcome to the latest C+VG look at the currently growing world of 16-Bit Personal computers. We've already looked at the ST market, and have come to the conclusion that these machines are fantastic. Now it's the turn of the Commodore Amiga.

The Amiga's created a lot of interest and excitement since its launch in 1985. In the next few pages we're covering the latest new packages to appear.

AmigA NewS

▲ Tell me how you feel?
Gutted! That's going to be the reaction of some existing Amiga owners now they've heard about Commodore's latest brainwave, the new Amigas. Commodore are introducing two new Amigas this year, the A500 and the A2000. Billed as "The Ultimate Home Micro", this A500 machine is a cheaper Amiga, and about time too. The price I paid for my A100 was a bit steep, but I'm glad to see that other people will soon be joining the Amiga ranks.

The A500 will sell for around £570. This machine will have 512k of RAM, (expandable to one megabyte) a built-in double sided 800k disk drive, and it will also feature Kickstart on ROM.

Inside the A500 you have exactly the same stuff as the A1000, except the chips maybe a different shape. This is because they have dropped the 'Proper Computer' look in order to make the A500 look like a C128. This is one feature which I don't like for one reason — the ports.

The ports on the A500 are in different places to those on the A100, which means some peripherals already available will not fit to it, this is a great worry for new A500 and existing A1000 owners, like

The problem for the existing Amiga owner is that if the A500 catches on, any new add-ons will be built with this in mind, not the A1000. This is immensely irritating as Amigas were not exactly cheap when we bought them.

The problem for A500 owners will be whether or not the hardware people will redesign their existing products to fit A500s, another worrying problem.

The other new Amiga is the A2000, which comes with all the same graphics, sound and stuff as the other two, but it has a couple of new interfaces and an 'open architecture'.

This means that you can plug in various boards, one of which enables it to emulate a IBM PC.

The A2000 has more memory than the others, it comes with one megabyte as standard. This is mainly for the fact that it is a business machine, and you need lots of RAM. This can be expanded to a huge five megabytes.

The machine also comes with the usual double sided 880k drive, but it has room in the body for more drives.

So with all this being launched, there must be an Amiga for you. There should be about 300-400 titles available when the A500 hits town, more than enough to choose from. As for the A2000, it's already in the shops, selling for £1,259.

ANIGA NEWS

Deja Vu turned a lot of heads when it first appeared for the MacIntosh, but Icom's adaption on the Amiga is fantastic. You're a detective who has lost his memory and has to find out what is going on in the 1930s world of American gangsters and corruption. Wonder what's behind that chair in the dirty apartment building? Don't type in a question or try to discern clues drawn on the screen use the mouse to move the chair and look behind it. Deja Vu makes full use of colour and sound to enhance atmosphere. This combines with graphic realism to turn what could have been a run of the mill static adventure with pretty pictures into a real quest.

Discovery: Trivia is an entertaining game despite being based on the two old ideas — platform games and Pac-Man. You control a male, or female earthling, a robot or an alien aboard a cargo ship that has had an accident. Its contents of alien animals has escaped and are running amok through the ship. All power is down as these little suckers have stolen the energy crystals and hidden them. You search throughout the ship, recovering crystals while avoiding the zoo-on-the-loose and their deadly energy draining touch. Only then can you refuel the ship and continue on your journey. Excellent animation, great colours and depth add to the feeling or realism. There are also neat sound effects. But what is there to make this more of a challenge? How about locked doors that need a correct answer to let you through? Speed and reflexes aren't enough. Knowledge of The Twilight Zone, comics, people and places are all vital. Electronic Art's Deluxepaint was a dream come true for would-be-artists. Now take all this power and add so many features that you can't list them all. The results? Deluxepaint II.

Name a feature. Zoom? How about a variable zoom resolving down? Or a "Fix" mode that turns the image into an unchangable background that can be drawn over without actually being changed. Then there's Stencil, which places drawings in front of, or behind objects. Four different colour cycles for animation effects meld with variable image sizing-increase the "page" to go past the screen, or eliminate borders when transfering to videotape. Turn a picture into a 3D perspective by setting coordinates and then simply clicking the mouse. Convert circles into spheres or pick up any odd shaped object and leave the background behind. And much, much more!

 Using icons makes for an easy time-but one of the most powerful features of the Amiga is the Command Line Interface, or CLI. This programs both abroad and extremely accurate control over every aspect of the operating system using keyboard commands. CLI, however, is not easy to use-but Zing! is. Zing! from Meridian Software creates a friendly space between the user and CLI in the form of "Hot Keys" which can access specific

New Tek's Digi View Video Digitiser takes the worry and complications out of transferring real images onto the computer screen. Used for C+VG's Space Camp feature (January 1987), the unit attaches to the parallel port and also to a black and white video camera. The camera then takes three pictures of the object to be digitised - one each through a red, green and blue filter. Software combines these into one colour picture which can be modified.

Another way to go is with Commodore's Genlock This attaches to the RGB port of the Amiga and displays a real time black and white or colour picture of any incoming source connected to it, VCR, television and the like. The incoming image replaces the background colour and allows the overlay of computer images. Of course, the onscreen image can be altered as well as ported back out to another source. An exciting range of effects become possible, from real time movement with graphics on top to animation taking place in front of actual settings and landscapes. The Genlock is fully provided, with an RGB out port, a composite Video Out port, four inputs for audio and two outgoing.

•With so many things going on, additional memory becomes vital. One way to get a bit more comes free when you install the Kickstart Eliminator Kit, from CMI. These are a set of ROM chips which must be soldered onto the Amiga's motherboard. This can be a bit tricky, so best have it done by someone competent if you have any fears. But consider what you get once that's done. First, you now have no need to boot up the Kickstart disk, because all that 1.2 information is now raring to go within seconds of turning on the computer. Plus the 256K of special RAM used only for Kickstart is now free and available. But if you want a good chunk of RAM, than try the Allegra E RAM board from Access Software. The unit comes standard with 512K, and can handle an additional two megabytes. It easily attaches to the side with two screws in a few seconds (through the expansion slot), and even derives its power from the computer.

Sound is something not to ignore, The Amiga can play great digitised effects, and you can create them with Applied Vision's Future Sound.

FS digitises sound sensibly and easily. The device is scarcely bigger than a paperback book, yet it manages to include a microphone input, the sampling device, an audio-in jack and volume control (a microphone is also included. The program displays a large screen which shows the image of the sound being sampled, and this image can be enlarged, segmented and dissected as well. Four voices are under independent control, and the sound rate is adjustable.

An excellent companion to DPII is Digi-Paint, from New Tek. This is the first drawing program that takes advantage of Hold and Modify (HAM). This special moder permits a palette of 4,096 colours to be on the screen simultaneously, and enables images to become extraordinary. Digi-paint can take a 32 colour Deluxe Paint 2 image and add to its range of colours, creating greater texture and depth.

Bored waiting for the next Indiana Jones movie? Never fear, the computer game is here! Now you can replay all your favourite moments inside the Temple of Doom thanks to the new coin-op conversion on the way from US Gold. Let's take a sneak peek inside the temple to see how old Indy is taking to his new role as computer hero . . .

Indiana

Just how do you squeeze a mega-machine like the Indiana Jones coin-op into a teeny-weeny home computer like the Spectrum or Commodore?

colourful action and excitment of the original arcade machine into the measily memory of our favourite entertainment systems?

Well, you start by playing the game. Yup, it's that simple. You get hold of the original machine and play it until you know every last little trick it can throw at you. Then you do it all over again!

Then the blood, sweat and tears start as the programmers sit down to work out the code and graphic designers rip their hair out trying to make a Spectrum look like an arcade machine.

The arcade machine mine sequence.

They all know that if they get it wrong, they will face the anger of games addicts like you, and a whole load of bad reviews in magazines like C+VG.

It often takes months for programmers to produce code that reproduces what you see in the arcades. Paragon are a relatively new development team rapidly making a name for themselves with projects like Indiana Jones for US Gold.

Head man Charles Cecil oversees John Prine, Spectrum and Amstrad, Chris Brunning, C64, Donald Campbell, Atari ST and graphics whizkid Tahir Rashid. This is the basis of the Indiana Jones team.

After a brief playtest of the game at their London HQ we at C+VG reckon you're in for a bit of a treat — especially if you're the owner of an Atari ST. Indiana Jones could just be the most playable ST game released to date. Big words? Well, just wait and see.

You'll remember that the climax of the movie takes place here as Indy attempts to rescue slave children from Mola Ram and his nasty Thuggee henchmen.

There's a fight through mineshafts, a desperate ride on a mine-railway and a battle in the temple itself. All this and more has been packed into the arcade and computer games.

Armed only with his trusty whip, Indy has to rescue five slave children, smashing the locks of their cages with a well aimed crack of the whip.

That whip comes in useful beating off the nasty Thuggee guards. If you're good enough you can lash them over the edge of a cliff. Otherwise your snake-like weapon simply stuns them for a while.

The children are locked in individual cages hidden in the various levels of the mine sequence. This is the first stage of the game. And Indy has to negotiate rickety wooden ladders and rock strewn narrow pathways.

Hit piles of skulls and snakes with the whip for extra points.

Make it through the mine and you're all set for the mad rollercoaster ride on the mine cart.

Chased by a mad bunch of Thuggee guards in a second cart you must take ALL the right turnings. Make a wrong move and the cart will end up in the sidings — and you truly will meet your doom in the temple.

Manoeuvre your cart so the Thuggee's end up in front of you and you can have a crack at them with your whip. But watch your back if they are behind you — they are armed and dangerous.

Atari ST graphics.

Mes

Reach the end of the line and you come to the Temple itself where Indy has to grab the mysterious Sankara stones hidden beneath the monstrous statue of the god Kali. This activates the exit doors and our hero can escape. To what?

To do the same thing all over again, that's what. To complete the game you have to play the Mine/Railway Maze/ Temple sequence three times before you reach the final challenging screen.

Remember the bridge sequence from the movie where Indy has to fight off hundreds of Thuggees on a rickety rope bridge suspended over a deep, deep chasm?

Well, that's what you get here. Fight you way across the bridge — beating off the final assault from Mola Ram, and you can consider yourself a REAL hero.

Charles and his team at Paragon set out to bring you an entertaining and accurate representation of the original arcade game. We reckon they've done just that.

Indiana Jones and the Temple of Doom should be in your favourite software store next month. Go for it!

He's big, he's bold, he doesn't care who he upsets. He's Conan the Librarian, a musclebound hero who crawled out from behind the skirting board in C+VG's offices and demanded to write the replies to your letters. And who are we to argue with someone with a six foot long broadsword? So it's over to our new barbarian buddy!

 I was interested to read the letter concerning compilation tapes. Here are my points on the subject. Being unemployed and maybe one of your older readers (21); I can only afford to buy either budget games or compilations. I won a CBM64 and am fairly new to computers. What I would like to see though, in the way of compilations, is software companies releasing games of a year or two years old. I know I have missed lots of good games only having a machine for nearly a year, and I would love to get some of the old classics, but sadly I cannot find them in the shops Shops only seem to stock the latest title or those of two/three months old. If you could persuade companies to release older games on compilations, I for one would be very happy. This also gets over the problem of putting recently released games on compilations. Wayne yeadon Bradford

... and with you Wayne! Good luck with the job hunting.

 I am writing to congratulate Elite on their excellent service concerning your free game offer when subscribing to C+VG.

I sent off my subscription enclosing £5 and said that the game of my choice was Ikari Warriors. After about two months I had received nothing but the magazines, so I wrote to you aksing what had become of the game. Very shortly afterwards I got a letter from you saying that you had put the matter in Elite's hands.

Only a few days later Commando arrived in the post with a note saying that Iari Warriors was to be released in the summer and that it would be sent to me then. So Elite have taken the liberty of sending me the game Commando free of charge due simply to the summer release date of Ikari Warriors. As you can imagine I was mag is not a heavy metal/rock mag.

very pleased to find that I would be getting two excellent games for nothing rather than one.

I would just like other people to know of this superb service. D N Tattersall

- Conan the Librarian: it's not may people who can get something for free, from 'thrifty Steve' at Elite.
- You probably won't print this letter (ha!) So I may as well stop right here. . . Ha! Andrew Blair Glasgow
- Conan the Librarian: we took you at your word. Right on Andrew! (ha).
- As a reader of C+VG, I expect to dine in a plethora of interesting articles and reviews on computer 'games' and related topics. What I do not want to read are the utterly irrelevant "thrash metal" LP reviews in your new "music mayhem" column. If you must feature music, then review something new and original and not this outdated metal stuff. If you can't do that, then please leave the reviews to the specialised music papers. Besides that you've got a great read. Keep up the good work

Stuart Gorland

- Conan the Librarian: anyone out there got any suggestions on what music to feature?
- I've never had cause to write to you before as I've found your magazine excellent ever since the

But, when I saw the section marked 'music' in the index I thought 'great' a section on computer music. Maybe a program or two to type in, but what's this a music page all about heavy Metal. Absolutely ridiculous. Look if I'd wanted to read about heavy rock I'd go and buy Keranng or whatever. Anyway, your computer

I really feel strongly about this. DON'T DO it again please. Don't spoil a great magazine. Birmingham Conan the Librarian: no apologies. Personally I think that alien bashing and head banging have a lot in common.

Write and tell us what you think. To bang or not to bang, that is the question.

- I am no arcade addict. Nor am I crazily keen on home computers. Peter Chan Leeds
- Oconan the Librarian: had to cut you short — immediate thought is "so what the hell are you writing to us for?" It's a tough old world, Peter . .
- I am writing in reply to 'Anon's' letter in the April issue of your magazine.

I have repeatedly read in the mailbag pages the term "younger readers". Five year olds? Do the users of this term think that eighty is middle aged?

I believe that the light-hearted approach of C+VG a appeals to both the young and the old. As some obscure Chinese sage once said "Man who have no sense of humour, age before his time" (profound eh!)

As to the argument about Microsell; even if some of your advertisers are called "Pirates" all have the right to be given the benefit of the doubt. Besides, it would be impossible to check all the hundreds of applicants wishing to advertise.

I would be most glad to see the absence of further letters from "wrinklies" like Anon who, I hope, are in the minority who prefer a more 'businesslike', (boring) approach to computing.

Keep goping C+VG — you're doing a great job! Stephen Bamford Derbyshire

- Conan the Librarian replies: our Editor's a wrinklie, but is soon to become a "shrivelly" . . . but don't tell anyone I said so. It's more than my job's worth!
- Please may I through your wonderful magazine inform all your readers about a Spectrum club that's just for them. It's called the computer Games Club. Due to the successes of our 7X81 club last year which is still doing quite well, we have decided to start a Spectrum club for 48, 128k and +2 users.

You pay one membership fee which lasts for one whole year and for that you will receive a free cassette which contains three great games when you join, plus four newsletter, four club magazines throughout the year and the chance to communicate with other Spectrum owners all round the

The newsletter will contain all the latest news about the software world upto date. The magazines will contain: news, reviews, playing tips, pokes, competitions, top ten games chart, letters page, penpals page, etc. If readers would like full details about the Spectrum or ZX club then write to me at the address below and state which club you are interested in. Steven Howlett Computers Games Club 24 Beacons View Rd

Morriston Swansea SA6 7HI

- Conan the Librarian: that's enough Steven. I believe this is what they call free advertising.
- I think your magazine is pretty good, and where I live it is also very popular and very diffcult to get a copy of. When I do obtain a copy however, I usually enjoy it immensely, but I do have a few minor complaints to make.
- 1. Your competitions totally hack me off. By the time I buy a copy the competitions are all well finished which makes it impossible
- 2. The mailbag page is pathetic, all it seems to be is a few pages set aside for various readers to abuse each other and to see who can write the stupidist letter!!!*
- 3. In the November issue 14 of the 29 reviews were written by Tim. Tell this Tim that unless he stops pulling rank onthe rest of you reviewers that you'll go to the union. I'd like to seem some reviews from the lucious Lesly as well (Conan: trouble is Carl. Tim's pretty bit around here, beaten only by Garry. Luscious Lesly's hands are tied!)

That's about all I can think about to moan about at the present time so this loyal C+VG fan is signing off from down-under.

*Yours wins hands down Carl!

 I am writing to thank you and US Gold for the absolutely and tremendously and fantastically and of course amazingly brilliant Xevious arcade machine that completely bowled me over when it arrived with C+VG and US Gold representatives. What can I says Well I could run down the street shouting at the tp of my voice 'Yippee", but I've already done that. So, I'll jsut grab my copy of C+VG and stare at my picture in print for ages. In all my life I have never had the luck to win a compeition of this immense magnitude (well, it was to me) and so I feel mighty chuffed at the outcome. The thing that makes it even more MEGA is the fact that I won a BRILL machine from a BRILL magazine. I can safely say that yours is at the top of my list and I hope beyond hope that C+VG stays up front. Roy Lewis Lancashire

• I always buy and read your magazine. It's just the best for guys like me. I mean game freaks. I have got a few questions for you.

First, I want to be a member, so that I don't have to go to the shop and find that it is sold out. So what must I do to join and how much will it cost? Second, I want to ask why you don't write more about Atari 8-bit, especially when you review games? When I read your mag I like lots and lots of reviews.

Third point — you are a magazine for computer games, and you all like good games, but I've never read before about the Sega Master System. I have had this now for four months and it is the best game computer I have seen. The graphics are really good and so is the sound. why don't you write about this computer?

Bart Trommelen
The Netherlands

C+VG subscription, Bart. Imagine the world's greatest computer games mag thudding through the letter box every month. No more dissapointment. No more tears. It will cost you £28,50 pence for 12 months. Just write to C+VG's Subscription department at our London address and make sure your cheque is payable to Computer and Video Games magazine. We are trying to improve our Atari 8-bit coverage. Honest. We've got a new reviewer, Jerry Muir, to check them out. The Sega hasn't been released in the United Kingdom yet, Bart. When it is we'll be reviewing the games for it.

You sound like man in need of a

• I think your mag is brill! I also think you should put the Pen Pal page in more often as it is a great idea

I read in a recent mag that Gunship is available for the Atari 800XL. Is this true? If so how much will it cost on tape in Ireland? Please put me out of my misery and answer these questions. Shane Cormican Co Dublin

• Conan the Librarian: The Atari 800XL Gunship won't be out until sometime "in the summer," according to a velvet-voiced MicroProse lady. No news on the cost yet. It should be worth waiting for, though.

● How do you do? I am a MSX user from Lincolnshire and I am wondering why you at C+VG never review MSX games. Oh, you might mention in the review that there is and MSX version about, but why do I never see the words Version Tested: MSX.

Do you own and MSX at C+VG? If so does it have a plug on it? If it does have a plug on it do you know how to switch it on? I would gladly teach how to use and MSX, where the most important thing being how to use those fantastic Konami cartridges of which there are so many about. These cartridges are of top quality and deserve to be reviewed. It is a pity they're not out for the other machines, as cartridges or indeed in any other form — which is probably your excuse for not reviewing them.

Still, there is always Tony Takoushi on the back page who enjoyes a Konami cartridge from time to time. Please answer this letter, or do I have to move to Japan?

D R Johnson Peterborough

• Conan the Librarian: Yes we have got an MSX. We have got an MSX reviewer. And if you look through this issue you'll find MSX reviews. So there's no need to move to Japan.

• I think you ought to have more coverage of computers such as the Electron as they did sell a million at Christmas. Also you ought to publish all the Microsell you get because sometimes I find that more interesting than the actual magazine.

You should cut out the comic strips and put all the advertising in one section. The reviews also should be in one section.

Sometimes, I feel that there ought to be more reviews for the Electron, BBC, Vic, Oric etc., and less for the Amstrad and Spectrum as I find it a bit off-putting when I open a computer magazine and find it full of information for other magazines.

I like the idea of Arcade Action and Next Month on the back pages. I just have one more point to make — that is the Software Chart. I think that is a good idea, but once again you should have a chart for my computer.

I know you will not publish this letter as it is not excatly a compliment. Julian Tubbs London

Conan the Librarian: Glad you enjoy the microsells, Julian. Even if we wanted to we couldn't put all the adverts into one section. The way a magazine is produced it makes it impossible. The reviews, however, do tend to be altogether and we do carry quite a few for the BBC and Electron. When was the last time you saw new Vic or Oric games, Julian? We can't remember. We dropped the charts because they are out of date by the time you get to read them. It's one of the problems of producing a monthly mag.

• I have been reading your magazine since November and have found that it is the best all round mag available.

I am the owner of a Spectrum+which I have had since they first came out but now I want to get an Atari ST. I am mainly a games player although I do own and use a Kempson mouse with Art Studio. I know nothing about STs, so I was hoping maybe you could send me some information. I will have a maximum budget of about £300 and definitely want a disk drive. Danny Beard

• Conan the Librarian: You want to know about STs, Danny. Then read last month's 12 page ST spectacular. There's no doubt it's a great machine at a good price. The Editor keeps cuddling ours.

I am enquiring about the computer game Exploding Fist II. My cousin and I finished this game in two days. In the rules of the game it states you will encounter water monsters, snakes and other creatures. Well, this is not so as we've said. We've cleared it. I would like to know if any other CBM64 owners has seen any of these creatures.

Chris Jenkins

Glasgow

Conan the Librarian: Well has anybody seen water monsters and snakes in Fist II? Let us know.

 This is my second letter to you and yes another 28p down the drain. I am one of the zillions that are loyal and friendly — in other words I am an Atari user.

There are loads of games to be reviewed, so please give the Atari a better place in your mag.

Now that's off my chest I would like to complain about Mastertronic. On nearly all their games, the screen shots on the inlay of the cassette are from another machine, giving a false impression to the buyer.

Now onto your mag again. Could you start a tip's section on the arcade games? We gamesters need tips - before we crack up. It could take the same format as the adventure Clues charts gone? Karl Morris

 Lots of companies use screenshots from, say a Spectrum game to promote a Commodore or Amstrad conversion. It's annoying but probably done to cut down on packaging production costs. The best way round it is to ask to see the game before you buy. I've already explained about the charts. Hopefully, Karl, the free arcade booklet which you've no doubt already discovered fixed to the front of last month's C+VG will have gone a long way to meet your demand for more arcade stuff. And talking of arcades . . .

 Lam writing to you as I have a query and I feel that you are "in the know" on this topic. I would like to know where I could buy and arcade machine and if possible the addresses of some of the big names like Sega and Konami. The reason why I am asking is that I set myself the task of buying a Space Harrier arcade machine — I fell in love with it last summer — and knowing that Tony Towns six arcade machines, I thought that you would know.

JKM

Conan replies: It is possible to buy old arcade machines but it's not that easy to find out where you can get them. Ask at your local arcade. Although they probably won't sell you the machine they may be able to tell where they send the old ones. But be warned. They aren't cheap. The price would obviously depend on popularity, age and condition. But our sources suggest prices would pounds. That sounds a lot but you must remember new arcade machines cost at least a couple of

I'm an adventurer and I'm afraid to say that Keith's pages are getting BORING! Where are the exclusives, where's the news of latest releases we used to get? Has Keith lost interest? Frank Gilbert. London Conan replies: What a wally! KC lost interest? You must be joking! C+VG's adventure pages are the best you'll read in ANY mag.

 Will you PLEASE do something about your magazine! I've got nothing against C+VG apart from the fact it's published monthly I've got nothing to read in

Jon Copeling, Merseyside

Conan replies: You want a weekly C+VG! Don't you realise how difficult it is to get Craig out of bed long enough to do a monthly? Still, what do the rest of you reckon about a weekly games mag?

I have just got my hands on a copy of the June issue and in your Arcade Action Special it says "More details about Atari Road Blasters when it reaches the UK' I've got news for you — it already has! I played the game at Butlins Holiday World at Minehead, Somerset during the week May 9th-15th.

Exclusive! Exclusive!
picks his nose!

Wow what thrills . . . As you may have gathered from the above, I am really naffed off about the use of the word EXCLUSIVE. I am sick and tired of people making a big deal about having exclusive this and exclusive that.

Before I go on, I have to say I try to get an exclusive every month for C+VG readers in my Hot Gossip page. But, and it is a BIG BUT, the exclusive is to satisfy MY need to give you something hot and new to read about.

The fact that I may have an exclusive on a game speaks for itself, and the reader will see that if he reads C+VG and other mags over a period of time.

I do not plaster the word exclusive across my page even though most of my reviews are way ahead of other mags. Examples of my "exclusives" being Mercenary / Gunship / Killed Until Dead / Batalyx / numerous ST games blah, blah, blah.

The whole situation got very petty and unprofessional with the Sinclair User parody by Crash, but this seemed to settle the exclusive review scene for a while.

Magazines are an information service and they try to bring you, the reader, the most interesting info as early as possible. The word exclusive is to my mind most effective when used sparingly.

My criteria in what to bring you in Hot Gossip is that the game is HOT. I will not review a game that I do not like. Thus if I see a game that I like, I will approach the author and promise him space in Hot Gossip if he can give me a scoop.

Alright, I have let off steam, NOW YOU LET OFF STEAM.

Do you give a damn whether the reviews you read are Exclusive or not?

I would really like to know (and most everyone in publishing I would imagine!) so put aside five minutes tonight and write to me a letter telling me what YOU think.

have got my hands on a hot little shoot-'em-up that is driving me wild!

It is called Killer Rings and comes from Tony Crowther, It runs on the Commodore 64 and is due soon on a budget label from Airolasoft.

Like most good shoot-'emups, it is nice and simple, you annihilate everything that moves. The title screen has three options, sound (either spot sound effect or background music), easy or hard levels and the choice to play from keyboard by defining your own keys.

Forget the background effects — just leave the music on!! It is really funky stuff, and rates as one of the best bits of 'thumpy, thumpy take 'em out' tunes I have EVER heard.

On playing the game you are faced with a rotating metallic gyroscope and you can move this around the bottom half of the screen spewing out death lasers up and down the screen. Above you there are fat, squat, hairy looking flies walking across the screen.

STATEMENT OF STAT

The flies peel off from the formation and zoom down on you but they swerve and twirl around you, teasing you to go for them. They also drop lethal bombs on you and contact is fatal — you lose one of your four lives.

Your laser can shoot the flies and the bombs they drop on you. When you shoot either bombs or flies they explode with zillions of colourful bits zipping around the screen.

On level three you get metallic log rolls to shoot and they are protected on their sides by little shields, so accurate shooting is in order.

Levels five and six have you facing the same fat, ugly flies again but they are more colourful and a chain of bouncing balls that loop around the top row of the screen regenerating the flies you kill.

Level seven has you facing that old brute the Mothership and you have to shoot a passageway into its hold to destroy it. As in the Phoenix tradition the mothership releases hordes of flies to keep you on the move and away from shooting her.

Lots of colour, blow away action and some really groovy, groovy music to zap along to make this a budget offering you cannot miss
